First U.S. Woman Walks in Space, Transferring Fuel on Challenger

By Thomas O'Toole

Washington Past Service
CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida — An American woman walked in space Thursday for the first time, spending almost three and a half hours in the cargo bay of the space shuttle Challenger, 138 miles (223 kilometers) above the Earth.

Kathryn D. Sullivan, a 33-yearold oceanographer and geologist, stepped out in space with David C. Leestma, at 11:38 A.M. EDT and circled the globe more than twice, performing tasks in daylight and darkness that required the patience, dexterity, stamina and strength once believed to be the sole preserve of men in space.

A Soviet cosmonant, Svetlana Savitskaya, was the first woman to take a space walk, on July 25.

Ms. Sollivan spent most of the time picking out tools and handing them to Mr. Leestma, who performed the actual task of opening a fuel line from one tank to another. The job might be described as a super-plumber's job, involving as it

STOCKHOLM — Jaroslav Seifert, an 83-year-old Czechoslovak poet and dissident, was awarded the 1984 Nobel Prize in literature Wednesday. He is the first Czechoslovak to win the prize. The Swedish Academy, which makes the award, said he had been chosen "for his poetry which, endowed with freshness,

To all those million verses in the world I've added just a few. They probably were no wiser than a cricket's chirrup. I know. Forgive me. I'm coming to the end.

They weren't even the first footmarks in the hunar dust. If at times they sparkled after all it was not their light.

And that which forces silent lips to quiver will make young lovers kiss as they stroll through red-gilded fields under a sunset slower than in the tropics.

Like loving, like hunger, like the plague, like war. At times my verses were embarrassingly foolish. But I make no excuse.

I believe that seeking beautiful words is better than killing and murdering.

Draft Names Military Leaders In Aquino Plot

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service

MANILA — A key document being considered in the inquiry into the assassination of the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr. asserrs he was shot to death by one of his government escorts in a wide-ranging military conspiracy.

The document is a 497-page memorandum compiled by four lawyers who assisted the citizens' panel that has been investigating the slaying. The lawyers did most of the questioning and cross-ex-amination of the 193 witnesses during the panel's 11-month investigaamong the five members on the board, who will determine what the final report on the slaving will say. It is considered unlikely that the board's final report, which is expected to be issued soon, will vary greatly from the lawyers' memorandum. But it is possible significant changes could be made.

One of the lawyers, Mario Ongkiko, said, "The board could essentially adopt our memorandum. adopt some part of it, or disregard it entirely."

According to a summary of the "final draft" of the memorandum, 18 military personnel and one lower-level government worker were involved in the purported conspiracy. Among the senior military offi-cers named are the armed forces chief of staff, Gen. Fabian C. Ver, the head of the Aviation Security Command, Gen. Luther Custodio. and Gen. Prospero Olivas, chief of the Metropolitan Manila Police Command.

However, the board is still working on its final report, and it continues to debate some issues. The official report, which was supposed to have been issued by Aug. 21, has been repeatedly delayed.

The government has maintained that a lone gunman hired by Communists, Rolando Galman, shot Mr. Aquino at the Manila Internathe opposition leader was returning from three years of self-exile in the United States.

But Mr. Aquino had five military escorts and the board lawyers concluded "one of them gunned down Aquino. The memorandum says the "most probable" candidates are two of the escorts. Rogelio Moreno, a member of the Police Constabulary, and Filomeno Miranda. an intelligence officer in the Aviation Security Command. Both men were behind Mr. Aquino when he came down the steps leading away from the plane. Mr. Aquino was shot in the back of the head. Mr. Galman was shot and killed by the escorts.

A key piece of previously undisclosed evidence, cited in a summary of the lawyers' memorandum. was the closed-door testimony of an airline technician, Celso Loterina. In the closed session, according to the lawyers' memo, Mr. Lo-terina said he saw one of the escorts shoot Mr. Aquino on the staircase leading down from the plane but he did not see the gunman's face.

The five-member board is reportedly split on whether to name General Ver. a close associate of President Ferdinand E. Marcos, as a member of the purported conspiracy. To name General Ver could cause unrest in the military, one of the most powerful institutions in the country, and pose a problem for the government.

Neither Mr. Marcos nor his wife. Imelda, was named in the purported conspiracy cited in the lawyers' memorandum.

Among those arrested were Gabriel Valdes, a Christian Democrat; Manuel Almeyda, a Socialist; Mario Sharpe and Enrique Silva Cimma, Social Democrats; Fanny Pollarolo, a Socialist; and two union leaders, Manuel Bustos and Juan Claudio Reyes.

Bowing to pressure from the church and rightist politicians, President Augusto Pinochet ordered charges dropped against six men and a woman imprisoned Tuesday for allegedly violating the Internal Security Law. They were accused of calling protests Sept. 4-5 in which nine persons were killed. A group of rightist politicians of the National Party visited the seven dissidents in prison to express their support.

Mr. Townshend, who was the Mitterrand Affirms Stand on Militants

BAYONNE, France (Reuters) - President François Mitterrand vowed Thursday to press ahead with a crackdown on militant Basque separatists and urged political exiles in France to renounce violence.

Mr. Mitterrand reaffirmed his government's tough line on Basque gnerrillas as he began a three-day domestic tour that will take him to France's southern border region Friday. The extradition of three Spaniards, alleged to be members of the Basque separatist organization ETA, from France on murder charges two weeks ago caused anti-French violence across the border and protest demonstrations in Bayonne.

Mr. Mitterrand told the Bayonne daily Sud Ouest that the extraditions did not mean France was abandoning its tradition of granting political exile, but added, "Terrorism in France involving ETA or similar organizations will be resolutely fought.'

Spanish Envoy Tells of Beirut Ordeal

BEIRUT (Reuters) — Spain's ambassador to Lebanon said Thursday he pulled a gun on one of two men who kidnapped him Wednesday and could have shot him. He said he surrendered the weapon after deciding he could not kill.

Describing his seizure, four-hour captivity and liberation by Moslem militiamen, the ambassador, Pedro Manuel de Aristegui, said he and one of his captors pointed guns and shouted at each other in the street. He said the kidnappers were relatives of one of two Lebanese Shiites held in Madrid after the attempted assassination of a Libyan diplomat.

"I could have shot him quite easily," Mr. de Aristegui, 56, said. "I thought: I cannot kill another person and if I do I cannot have a normal diplomatic mission in Lebanon." Mr. de Aristegui, Spain's ambassador in Managua during Nicaragua's civil war and governor of the Basque-province of Guipuzcoa, Spain, from 1980 to 1982, said he was the only Spanish diplomat in Beirut to carry a gun.

For the Record

The world chess champion, Anatoli Karpov, and the challenger, Gary Kasparov, agreed Thursday to a draw in their 11th game, adjourned on the 41st move Wednesday. Mr. Karpov has won four of the six victories needed to retain his title.

A French journalist, Jacques Abouchar, who was captured in Afghanistan three weeks ago, "will appear soon before a revolutionary tribunal," Izvestia reported Thursday. Mr. Abouchar, 53, who works for French television, was captured in an ambush by Afghan-Soviet forces Sept. 18, soon after he had crossed the border from Pakistan.

Pope John Paul II arrived in the Dominican Republic for a one-day visit Thursday, bringing what he called a message of hope for Latin America that change could come "not in struggle, but in love."

Unlike Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mondale, who will debate again Oct. 21, the vice presidential candidates will not have a rematch.

The 90-minute debate in Philadelphia, sponsored by the League of Women Voters, was to be carried live on radio and television.

Political analysts say the performances by Mr. Bush and Ms. Ferraro could have a greater effect on their own political futures than on the outcome of this year's presidential contest.

Ms. Ferraro, who until recently had been regarded by party leaders as the more aggressive half of the Democratic ticket, hoped to use the event to build on the political lift Mr. Mondale gained in his debate with Mr. Reagan.

WASHINGTON — Walter F. Mondale significantly improved his rating with voters in Sunday night's debate but did not immediately gain much ground on President Ronald Reagan, a Washington Post-

ABC News poll indicates.

Mr. Mondale shaved three points from Mr. Reagan's 18-point predebate advantage. A Post-ABC poll completed Oct. 3 gave Mr. Reagan a 55-to-37 percent lead. The survey taken Monday and Tuesday nights gave the president a 56-to-41 percent lead.

But Mr. Mondale's personal rating with those polled improved dramatically, as a sizable majority rated him the winner of the debate. His favorable-unfavorable scores shifted from 41-to-49 percent before the debate to 54-to-43 percent after it.

Six in 10 of those polled said they saw at least half of Sunday's debate, and 55 percent said Mr. Mondale won. Eighteen percent said they thought Mr. Reagan won. The remainder thought it was even or had no opinion.

There was some comfort for the Republicans in the poll's finding that Mr. Reagan's debate performance, which campaign officials have said was disappointing, did not immediately erode his public support. His favorable-unfavorable score was 60-to-35 percent before the debate and 61-36 percent 48 bours after the debate.

Mr. Mondale's gains were striking, particularly among male voters and independents. In both groups, he turned strongly negative ratings into a positive standing.

Public-opinion analysts say that changes in attitudes often precede shifts in voting intentions, especially in a contest like the Reagan-Mondale race, in which a high percentage of voters express a strong preference early in the campaign.

The communique said: "The brotherly Egyptian-Jordanian encounter is a prelude to a new and effective cohesion which will consolidate common Arab action to confront serious difficulties facing the Palestine issue and to restore the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, foremost their rights to self-determination."

Mr. Mubarak said earlier: "We are working for coordination between the two countries for the sake of the Arab cause."

Not Voting

Is a Vote

Unopposed

By Flora Lewis

PARIS — Watched from across the Atlantic, the U.S. presidential campaign has an unreal quality that seems more about emotional enphoria than government. Europeans are perplexed in trying to pin down

But even more bewildering to people here is the talk of Americans who shrug and say they may not vote

because they do not feel enthusiasm for either candidate. It is hard to explain why Americans, who speak so proudly of democracy, do not seem to feel much obligation to exercise it. Perhaps it is because the European societies had much more of a struggle to achieve and preserve the right to choose their governments, and to reject them, that they do not pass up the chance to vote.

In West Germany's last general election 89.1 percent of the voters cast ballots. In France's presidential election 85.85 percent voted in the decisive round. In Britain Margaret

Thatcher's majority came out of a total cast by 72.7 percent of the electorate. In Spain, which is only getting used to free elections, the figure was 79.6 percent. In Italy 89 percent turned up. Belgium, where voting is compulsory, tallied 94.6 percent.

Most voter turnouts were substantially lower in last spring's European elections, but the European Parliament has no power, and people con-sidered the occasion merely a straw sidered the occasion merely a straw poll on the popularity of their national governments. Still, anything much under 80 percent provoked outcries of distress and despair at citizens' apathy or irresponsibility.

In the 1980 U.S. elections only 52.9

percent of the eligible voters used their right, a slim majority.

The most common, and most remarkable, explanation by stay-athomers is that neither candidate excites them. But an election is not the coronation of a pop star.

The attitude suggests a shopper who went out for a new dress or pair of shoes, and, not finding something especially attractive, decided to do without. But there is going to be a U.S. government for the next four years, no matter how few people bother to help pick it. Abstaining is giving away one's vote to someone else who has made a decision.

The size of the vote this year is of particular importance because the fuzziness of issues has turned the campaign into a question of ideologi-cal mandate. It will make a difference

how big the winning majority is in interpreting what the country wants government to do and not to do.

President Reagan has artfully jug-gled the demands of the new right and the fundamentalists in his first term, trimming when they pushed be-yond what seemed politically practi-cal for the rest of the country. But the Republican convention in Dallas made clear that these arch-conservatives are not satisfied and seek to complete much greater changes in government's role. If there is a landslide they will claim that the bulk of

The outcome of Senate and House elections should provide a clear test of that claim. But people who do not vote for president probably will not vote at all, thus affecting the legis-

Will UNESCO Reform?

members. Unless the meeting gives clear indication of substantial change to come in UNESCO programs and procedures, the United States is likely to persist in its decision to withdraw. U.S. withdrawal would reduce the organization's budget by about 25 percent and could encourage other Western nations to reconsider their membership.

Thus far, a year of dispute concerning UNESCO has produced so little in the way of change that some have characterized the organization's attitude toward the Western criticism as cynical, even defiant. Perhaps this UNESCO response was inevitable. Basic values are at stake, after all. Leaving aside the organization's profound administrative confusion, many of its most controversial policies are probably a fair and accurate reflection of what its most active and determined member governments genuinely wish to see accomplished in the world.

The dominant force in UNESCO in recent years has been an alliance of certain Third World and Soviet bloc countries, most of which are governed by authoritarian systems. Their representatives in international organizations tend to be active and often effective advocates of authoritarian values.

Nowhere is this activism more clearly evident than in UNESCO's inclination to try to reorder the international flow of information, including the functioning of the world press. On few issues do authoritarian and pluralistic social philosophies clash more directly. So long as this issue remains on the UNESCO agenda it is bound to produce deep and irreconcilable division.

Some have speculated in recent months that UNESCO decision-makers might be considering at least a temporary tactical retreat on matters relating to press freedom, if only to placate some of their more vocal critics during a period of intense review. But

Israel's request for large, new and in effect

open-ended grants, loans and guarantees forces the question of U.S.-Israeli relations back to basics. Not all Israelis are ready for it, and perhaps fewer Americans, but an extra

Israel is, after America, the only fighting democracy: the single friend sharing U.S. values prepared to apply its considerable power for shared goals in a strategic region. The few billions Israel needs, its leadership suggests, are peanuts next to the many billions America routinely invests in security partnerships elsewhere. The portion of its economic burden that Israel cannot carry alone, it argues, arises specifically from acts of war (1973, Lebanon) and peace (with Egypt) in which the United States had a major interest. All of which is the truth but not the whole truth.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres arrived in UNESCO's Executive Board is now con- even this hope has been discouraged by sidering reform proposals from Western recent reports of a UNESCO role in setting up yet another meeting, scheduled for March 18-23 in Mexico City, to consider press-related issues. The Government Affairs Committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association has expressed its "alarm" at UNESCO's "participation in and support for" the Mexico City meeting. The committee warns that the meeting "revives some press issues upon which compromise repeatedly has proved impossible," and that "these issues too often have involved schemes for censorship through licensing journalists in the name of 'protection.'"

It is possible and eminently desirable for democratic and non-democratic governments to cooperate through international organizations in practical ways on matters of mutual interest. This was once what UNESCO was all about. But when some governments persist in trying to enlist UNESCO in support of their political and ideological agenda, the resulting strains are inevitably more than the organization can bear. Nor can these strains be eased by cosmetic adjustments, such as UNESCO's recent decision to hire a Washington public relations firm to help improve its image.

We recognize the constructive work many UNESCO programs have accomplished and we regret the opportunities for further accomplishment that might be lost because of American withdrawal. But it is also true that the United States government endured a period of long provocation before it took its stand late last year. Principled stands of this sort should not be lightly changed. The United States should reconsider its decision only if there is strong and convincing evidence that those who hold the balance of power in UNESCO have come to understand that political and ideological objectives had best be pursued in other arenas.

For U.S. Foreign Policy, a Vacuum Issue

BOSTON — Now we have "the age issue."

That is the gingerly way newspapers and television have approached the reality seen by millions of Americans in the first Reagan-Mon-dale debate last Sunday: a president who is rambling in his replies to questions, disjointed. occasionally incoherent and confused.

But it is more than a question of age or verbal slips. For in his nearly four years in the White House Mr. Reagan has never governed in the true presidential sense. Authoritative accounts have shown him again and again to be remote, uninformed, unwilling to grapple with the tough issues. For anyone who cared to see, that is what the debate showed. It stripped away the illusion that Ronald Reagan is governing.

In the American system of government it is in foreign policy that presidential leadership is crucial. Without a president ready to galvanize the bureaucracy and seize the imaginative moment for action abroad, diplomacy is likely to be deadlocked. The record of the last four years shows not one large-scale U.S. diplomatic achievement. The vacuum in the White House is evident in several vital foreign policy areas today.

Nicaragua is one, and perhaps the most immi-nently dangerous. The United States is on the edge of endless military conflict there. Right now there is a chance, perhaps the last clear chance, to avoid that outcome by political means. But what is the Reagan policy? Division in the administration makes it impossible to say.

For the last three years the Central Intelligence Agency has effectively been running the war against the Sandinist government in Nicaragua, arming and paying the contras to raid the country, to kidnap and kill villagers. Yet the Reagan administration has insisted that it wants a political solution. It says it supports the efforts of the Contadora group — Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama — to find a way out.

The dualism was brought home to me in an ironic way this week when the leader of the ronic way this week when the leader of the Nicaraguan government, Daniel Ortega Saavedra, visited Boston on a tour that also took him to New York, Los Angeles and Atlanta: This man whose government is a present target of U.S. money and guns was guarded by a watchful detail of the U.S. Secret Service.

What does the United States want in Nicaragua? Is the Reagan administration determined to drive the Sandinists out of power? Or would it be content with an assurance that they will not intervene in El Salvador or other troubled spots in the region? The signs are that the administration has not made up its own mind. A few months ago, Washington Post columnist

Philip Geyelin canvassed the record (IHT, June 9). President Reagan said last March that the Sandinists would have to "restore Democratic rule" before Washington called off the contras. When that got him in trouble in the Senate, he said the United States did not want to "destabilize or overthrow the government of Nicaragua."
In April he said the United States would continue to "inconvenience" the Nicaraguan government only as long as it tried to export revolution. in May he said "the cancer of Communism" must be "excised" from Central America.

In short, as Mr. Geyelin summed it up, the Reagan policy is to (a) remove, (b) reform, (c) restrain or (d) inconvenience the Sandinists.

The confusion about objectives remains. Recent reports have spoken of sharp divisions within the administration about whether to work seriously for a political settlement. The embarrassment and the danger of all this have been brought to a critical level by the dramatic action of Nicaragua in accepting a peace plan put forward by the Contadora group. It would forbid foreign military bases in Central America, reduce the presence of arms, troops and foreign advisers and bar support for attempts to overthrow governments in the region.

The United States was thrown into humiliating confusion by Nicaragua's acceptance of the proposed treaty. Spokesmen have said one thing, then the other — and meanwhile this last clear chance for peace is dimming.

The responsibility is not all on one side. The Sandinists could do more to show their will for a political settlement. But they cannot be expected to make a deeper commitment — and diplomacy cannot effectively function — as long as there is no clear United States policy.

Only a president can grasp such a chance, as Richard Nixon did in China. Ronald Reagan, a conservative president, could seize the present moment for peace and stability in Central America. But that would take imagination, determination and the will to do hard work in foreign policy. Those qualities are among what lacks in the presidential vacuum.

Honduras, Too, Has Sensitive National Sentiment

By Lucy Komisar

N EW YORK — The questions raised by Foreign Minister Edgardo Paz Barnica about Honduras's relations with the United States come as no surprise to any-one who has been following U.S. attempts to conduct Central America policy out of his tiny, impoverished country. In Honduras, as elsewhere in the Third World, the United States has underestimated the power of nationalism.

Mr. Paz said in an interview in New York on Monday (IHT, Oct. 10): "We want a more independent Flexibility — a dread word to Jerusalem must become more evident in Israel's terms for departing from Lebanon. Mr. Peres brought to relationship on security issues and Washington some hard-won cabinet decisions more assistance in helping build our economy." Honduran nationalism seeks both the image and the reality to improve the "quality of life" for West Bank Arabs; other West Bank decisions, even harder, must be forthcoming. To seek a common understanding on this level is a task of many of sovereignty. It shows in a sensitivity to insults to national pride. It can sometimes resist the pressures and temptations of the world's predays and many hands. But unless the United States and Israel are prepared to undertake it, eminent economic power.
The Reagan administration's failwith eyes open, there is only transient value

"How would you like it if Honduras sent troops to New York?" He wor-ried about Honduras becoming a target for the Sandinists and about its bad image in the region. Hondu-ran officials do not like sitting in international meetings where Nica-ragnans call Hondurans lackeys and wave press clippings about anti-Sandinist activity in Honduras.

The case of U.S. Green Berets training Salvadoran troops at the Regional Military Training Center on Honduras's north coast was the last straw. The border dispute that caused the "soccer war" with El Salvador in 1969 has not been settled. The Honduran army, humiliated at the outcome then, expects to fight Salvadoran troops again. Now the United States, which has shown no interest in seeking a solution to the border dispute, was training the enemy on Honduran soil. This is not to say that Washington wields no influence. Mr. Paz was clearly as interested in in-creased U.S. aid as he was critical of heavy-handed manipulation that puts Honduran national interests second to U.S.-Soviet strains is bound to backfire. Economic interests may in the end make it necessary for Honduras to follow Wash-ington's orders, but resentment and

The government issued a lame communique saying that it made its own foreign policy based on patri-otic considerations. Commentators wondered acidly what the ambassa-

At a Rotary Club meeting in Tegucigalpa I listened to a retired col-onel, Juan Ramón Molina, who was minister of the interior and head of the security forces in a previous mil-itary regime, say: The United States thinks that the intervention of marines at any time can solve political problems with military so-lutions in 24 hours. MUNICH — An editorial car-toon in the conservative Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung the other day depicted "Michael," the German version of "John Q. Public," paying obeisance to two idols. On one pedestal was a shiny car: "The Automobile." On the other were some trees and a deer: "The German Forest." The caption was that memorable line of Goethe's, "Two souls dwell, alas, within my breast." The cartoon summed up succinctly what has become one of the country's most controversial issues: whether West Germans should temper their racetrack driving habits, by imposing speed limits on the antobahns, in order to save their dying forests.

The controversy pits Social Democrats and Greens against Christian and Free Democrats. It also appears to be causing a rift in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's coalition government. Of the 30 million cars on the country's roads, all except the diesel-powered ones use leaded fuel; none have catalytic converters. West Ger-many has no speed limit on its freeways. There is a "recommended speed" of 130 kilometers (80 miles) per hour, but most drivers seem to regard that as a minimum. It is not uncommon to drive at that speed and be passed by whole columns of cars moving half again as fast.

Attempts to impose speed limits, less for safety reasons than to save on the national fuel bill, were made in the early 1970s but met stiff resistance from the public, the automobile industry and Mr. Kohl's Christian Democrats, then sitting on the oppo-sition benches. The slogan coined, and still used, against the speed limit was "Freie Fahrt für freie Bürger" roughly, "Full speed ahead for a free people." A speed limit, it was intimated, was tantamount to intringing on constitutional rights.

But now to the forests. To think of Germany without them is like not thinking of it at all. Germany is, after all, the birthplace of the Christmas tree, the land of Hansel and Gretel, of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, of vast lore and myth. The woods have played a large role in art, music and literature and contributed significantly to molding national attitudes.

"In no other modern country," according to Elias Canetti, the Nobel laureate, "has the forest spirit remained as alive. The rigidity and similarity of tall trees, their thickness and multitude fill the German heart with mysterious joy. Germans seek out the forests in which their ancestors lived and feel as one with the woods."

By John Dornberg

percent of the country, are big business, representing an investment worth $60 billion. They provide jobs for some 800,000 people in wood-working and allied industries. Since the start of this decade trees have been dying at an alarming rate. According to fresh figures from the Ministry of Agriculture, 40 percent of West Germany's woodland is dis-eased, terminally damaged or dead due to acid rain, ozone smog or other forms of pollution from factories, power plants, home chimneys and, the key point, automobile exhausts.

In some areas, including the Black Forest, damage is already almost total: Between 60 and 90 percent of conifers are afflicted and this year broad-leaf trees began showing the same symptoms of premature decay. To fight the blight Mr. Kohl's government last year enacted regulations that sharply lower permissible limits of sulfur dioxide emissions by power stations and industrial plants. All newly built installations must have "gas scrubbers" and existing ones have to meet the new standards by 1993 or face closure.

And Interior Minister Friedrich

effective in 1986. The proposal met stiff opposition from West German and other European automakers.

Last week Mr. Kohl's cabinet bowed by deciding to postpone the installation of anti-pollution devices on new cars until January 1989, although this, too, brought howls of protest from the European industry. then, environmentalists argue, the trees will all be gone."
The other day the German Environmental Protection Agency leaked a study finding that some of the interim damage could be prevented by imposing speed limits of 100 kilome-ters per hour on the autobahns and on ordinary roads. The study shows that automobile emissions in crease substantially at higher speeds and that the proposed limits would reduce nitric oxide emissions by about 18 percent annually.

Immediately hailed as a panacea. at least until converters are in general use, by the Social Democrats and Greens, the speed limit idea has al-ready elicited protests from the automotive lobby, which promotes and dotes on high speed. It won mixed reviews in Mr. Kohl's camp, where some cabinet members are for it but the majority vociferously opposed.

Meanwhile the state of Hesse has introduced "experimental" speed limits of 100 and 120 kilometers per hour on three segments of antobahn in the Frankfurt area. The question for West Germans remains: Which do they love more? Their trees or the thrill of driving like bats from hell? Just as within Goethe's Faust, about to make his pact with Mephistopheles, two souls do indeed dwell within their breast, "and each repels its brother."

'Willing' Us on to War

Every time I see a Western commentator use the simple future tense ("will") in referring to a possible next war, I wince. Drew Middleton writes in "NATO Leaders Consider Superiority in Air to Be Crucial Tactical Factor" (Oct. 2): "There are many who say that basic Soviet strategy has not altered and that the emphasis will be on mass attack." In my experience, Soviet publications, whatever else one can say about them, are scrupulous not to permit such lapses. Never mind that Mr. Middleton's use of the future occurs in indirect speech. If we are not careful, we can "will" a next war into existence. JOHN M. EVANS.

About President Reagan

Regarding "Skepticism Remains, but Europeans Shift Opinion on a Reagan Victory" (Oci. 6):

William Drozdiak's report on European attitudes to the prospect of a second Reagan term is a clever piece of election propaganda. Anyone who Moreover, forests, which cover 35 followed the European reaction to

Mr. Reagan's "joke" about bombing Russia knows that most Europeans are profoundly worried by the prospect of a Reagan victory. That the man who can unleash a nuclear bolocaust thinks that this is a fit subject to joke about is terrifying.

Even more worrying is the attitude of the American public, which seems to believe that the presidential election is a television personality contest. To a European visiting the Unit-ed States, the level of debate is frighteningly simplistic. A re-elected Reagan will have nothing to stop him from implementing his simplistic, apocalyptic world view, endangering us all. You pick a. naive comment, out of context, by Labor leader Neil Kinnock ("Reagan has done the trick. He has got the economy working efficiently and attracted money, and that is why the pound has slumped to such a low level.") that is obviously directed against his British political opponents, as proof that Europeans across the spectrum are no longer concerned about a Reagan victory. Nothing could be further from the truth.

JAKOB von UEXKULL.

During a recent visit to Europe I was a daily reader of your newspaper. I was struck by the repeated, onesided, negative opinions of your editorials and columnists concerning Ronald Reagan. During his four years in office President Reagan has brought to the fore two elements that had not been seen in politics for decades: integrity and a convincing sincerity that he wants to defend the individual's liberty against the heavy hand of the state. Thus the issues in the campaign become less important, for people see that Mr. Reagan can be trusted to do the right thing at the right time. It is a position that is felt, almost unconsciously, and will be expressed individually and silently on Nov. 6. CHARLES BRIGGS.

INTERNATIONAL PROGRESS ORGANIZATION

CONCLUSIONS AND JUDGMENT OF THE BRUSSELS TRIBUNAL ON REAGAN'S FOREIGN POLICY

The International Conference on the Reagan Administration's Foreign Policy convened in Brussels from 28-30 September, 1984, under the auspices of the International Progress Organization. Reports were submitted by international jurists and foreign policy specialists on various aspects of the Reagan Administration's foreign policy. Among the participants of the conference were Seán MacBride (Nobel Peace Laureate, Ireland), Prof. Georg Wald (Nobel Laureate, Havard University), General Edgardo Mercado Jarrin (Peru), General Nino Pasti (former Deputy Supreme Commander of NATO) and Hortensia Bussi de Allende (Chile). The reports were presented before a Panel of Jurists consisting of Hon. Farouk Abu-Eissa (Sudan), Attorney, former Foreign Minister, Secretary-General of the Arab Lawyers Union; Prof. Francis A. Boyle (U.S.A.), Professor of International Law from the University of Illinois, Chairman; Dr. Hans Goeran Franck (Sweden), Attorney, Member of the Swedish Parliament; Hon. Mirza Gholam Hafiz (Bangladesh), Former Speaker of the Bangladesh Parliament and currently a Senior Advocate of Bangladesh Supreme Court; Hon. Mary M. Kaufmann (U.S.A.), Attorney-at-Law, prosecuting attorney at the Nuremberg War Crimes Trial against I.G. Farben; Dr. Jean-Claude Njem (Cameroon), Assistant-Professor at the Faculty of Law, Uppsala University, and a Consultant of the Government; Prof. Alberto Ruiz-Eldredge (Peru), Professor of Law, former President of the National Council of Justice; and Dr. Muemtaz Soysal (Turkey), Professor of Constitutional Law, University of Ankara. An accusation against the international legality of the Reagan Administration's foreign policy was delivered by the Honorable Ramsey Clark, former U.S. Attorney General. The defense was presented by a legal expert of the Reagan Administration.

Based upon all the reports and documents submitted and the arguments by the advocates, the Brussels Panel of Jurists hereby renders the following conclusions concerning the compatibility of the Reagan Administration's foreign policy with the requirements of international law.

A. Introduction

1. General Introduction. The Reagan Administration's foreign policy constitutes a gross violation of the fundamental principles of international law enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations Organization, as well as of the basic rules of customary international law set forth in the U.N. General Assembly's Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States and the Protection of Their Independence and Sovereignty (1965), its Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation Among States in Accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (1970), and its Definition of Aggression (1974), among others. In addition, the Reagan Administration is responsible for complicity in the commission of Crimes Against Peace, Crimes Against Humanity, War Crimes and Grave Breaches of the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions of 1949.

2. Grenada. The Reagan Administration's 1983 invasion of Grenada was a clearcut violation of U.N. Charter articles 2 (3), 2 (4), and 33 as well as of articles 18, 20 and 21 of the Revised OAS Charter for which there was no valid excuse or justification under international law. As such, it constituted an act of aggression within the meaning of article 39 of the United Nations Charter.

3. Threat of U.S. Intervention. In direct violation of the basic requirement of international law mandating the peaceful settlement of international disputes, the Reagan Administration has implemented a foreign policy towards Central America that constitutes a great danger of escalation in military hostilities to the point of precipitating armed intervention by U.S. troops into combat against both the insurgents in El Salvador and the legitimate government of Nicaragua.

4. El Salvador. The Reagan Administration's illegal intervention into El Salvador's civil war contravenes the international legal right of self-determination of peoples as recognized by article 1 (2) of the United Nations Charter. The Reagan Administration has provided enormous amounts of military Farouk Abu-Eissa Mary Kaufman assistance to an oppressive regime that has used it to perpetrate a gross and consistent pattern of violations of the most fundamental human rights of the people of El Salvador.

5. Nicaragua. The Reagan Administration's policy of organizing and participating in military operations by opposition contra groups for the purpose of overthrowing the legitimate government of Nicaragua violates the terms of both the U.N. and O.A.S. Charters prohibiting the threat or use of force against the political independence of a state. The Reagan Administration has flouted its obligation to terminate immediately its support for the opposition contra groups in accordance with the Interim Order of protection issued by the International Court of Justice on 10 May 1984.

6. International Court of Justice. The Panel denounces the patently bogus attempt by the Reagan Administration to withdraw from the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in the suit brought against it by Nicaragua for the purpose of avoiding a peaceful settlement of this dispute by the World Court in order to pursue instead a policy based upon military intervention, lawless violence and destabilization of the legitimate government of Nicaragua.

7. Mining Nicaragua.

7. Mining Nicaraguan Harbors. The Reagan Administration's mining of Nicaraguan harbors violates the rules of international law set forth in the 1907 Hague Convention on the Laying of Submarine Mines, to which both Nicaragua and the United States are parties.

C. Nuclear Weapons Policies

8. Arms Control Treaties. The Reagan Administration has refused to support the ratification of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty of 1974, the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty of 1976, and the SALT II Treaty of 1979, in addition to renouncing the long-standing objective of the U.S. government to negotiate a comprehensive test ban treaty. As such the Reagan administration has failed to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament as required by article 6 of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty of 1968. Similarly, the Reagan Administration's "Strategic Defense Initiative" of 1983 threatens to breach the Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems Treaty of 1972.

9. Pershing 2 Missiles. The deployment of the offensive, first-strike, counterforce strategic nuclear weapons system known as the Pershing 2 missile in the Federal Republic of Germany violates the Non-Circumvention Clause found in article 12 of the SALT II Treaty. The Reagan Administration is bound to obey this prohibition pursuant to the rule of customary international law enunciated in article 18 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties to the effect that a signatory to a treaty is obliged to refrain-from acts that would defeat the object and purpose of a treaty until it has made its intention clear not to become a party.

 The MX missile. The MX Missile is an offensive, first-strike, counterforce strategic nuclear Francis A. Boyle, Chairman Jean-Claude Njem weapons system that can serve no legitimate defensive purpose under U.N. Charter article 51 and the international laws of humanitarian armed conflict.

11. No-first-use. In accordance with U.N. General Assembly Resolution 1653 of 24 November 1961, the panel denounces the refusal by the Reagan Administration to adopt a policy mandating the no-first-use of nuclear weapons in the event of a conventional attack as required by the basic rule of international law dictating proportionality in the use of force even for the purposes of legitimate self-de-

12. ASAT Treaty. The Panel calls upon both the United States and the Soviet Union to negotiate unconditionally over the conclusion of an anti-satellite weapons treaty.

D. Middle East

13. Lebanon. For the part it played in the planning, preparation and initiation of the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon, the Reagan Administration has committed a Crime against Peace as defined by the Nuremberg Principles. Likewise, under the Nuremberg principles, the Reagan Administration becomes an accomplice to the Crimes against Humanity, War Crimes and Grave Breaches of the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions of 1949 that have been committed or condoned by Israel and its allied Phalange and Haddad militia forces in Lebanon. Such complicity includes the savage massacre of genocidal character of hundreds of innocent Palestinian and Lebanese civilians by organized units of the Phalangist militia at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps located in West Beirut that were then subject to the control of the occupying Israeli army. The Reagan Administration has totally failed to discharge its obligation to obtain Israel's immediate and unconditional withdrawal from all parts of Lebanon as required by U.N. Security Council Resolutions 508 and 509 (1982), both of which are legally binding on Israel and the United States under U.N. Charter article 25. This includes Israeli evacua Southern Lebanon.

14. The Palestinian Question. The Reagan Administration's policy towards the Palestinian people as well as the Reagan "Peace Plan" of 1 September 1982 violates the international legal right of the Palestinian people to self-determination as recognized by U.N. Charter article 1 (2). As recognized by numerous U.N. General Assembly Resolutions, the Palestinian people have an international legal right to create an independent and sovereign state. The Palestine Liberation Organization has been recognized as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people by both the United Nations General Assembly and the League of Arab States. The Reagan Administration's non-recognition of the PLO and its attempt to brand the PLO a "terrorist" group contravene the Palestinian people's right to liberation. The panel denounces the negative attitude of the Reagan Administration towards the call by the United Nations' Secretary General for the convocation of an international conference under the auspices of the United Nations, with the United States and the Soviet Union as co-chairmen, and with the participation of all parties involved in the conflict including the PLO, for the purpose of obtaining a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

15. Israeli Settlements. The Reagan Administration's declared position that Israeli settlements in the Occupied Territories are "not illegal" is a violation of U.S. obligations under article 1 of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 to ensure respect for the terms of the Convention (here article 49) by other High Contracting Parties such as Israel.

16. Libya. The Reagan Administration's dispatch of the U.S. Sixth Fleet into the Gulf of Sidra for the purpose of precipitating armed conflict with the Libyan government constitutes a breach of the peace under article 39 of the U.N. Charter. The Reagan Administration's policy to attempt to destabilize the government of Libya violates the terms of the United Nations Charter article 2 (4) prohibiting the threat or use of force directed against the political independence of a state.

E. Africa, Asia and the Indian

17. Apartheid. The Panel denounces the Reagan Administration's so-called policy of "constructive engagement" towards the apartheid regime in South Africa. This specious policy encourages discrimination and oppression against the majority of the people of South Africa; it hampers effective action by the international community against apartheid, and facilitates aggressive conduct by the South African apartheid regime against neighbour states in violation of the U.N. Charter. As such, the Reagan Administration has become an accomplice to the commission of the international crime of apartheid as recognized by the universally accepted International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid of 1973. The Panel also denounces the cooperation between the Reagan Administration and South Africa in military and nuclear matters.

18. Namibia. The Reagan Administration has refused to carry out its obligations under Security Council Resolution 435 (1978) providing for the independence of Namibia, as required by article 25 of the U.N. Charter. The right of the Namibian people to self-determination had been firmly established under international law long before the outbreak of the Angolan civil war. The Reagan Administration has no right to obstruct the achievement of Namibian independence by conditioning it upon or "linking" it to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola in any way. Both the U.N. General Assembly and the Organization of the African Unity have recognized SWAPO as the legitimate representative of the Namibian people, and the Reagan Administration is obligated to negotiate with it as such.

19. Angola. Cuban troops are in Angola at the request of the legitimate government of Angola in order to protect it from overt and covert aggression. mounted by the South African apartheid regime from Namibia. There is absolutely no international legal justification for South African aggression against Angola in order to maintain and consolidate its reprehensible occupation of Namibia. The Angolan government has repeatedly stated that when South Africa leaves Namibia it will request the withdrawal of Cuban troops, and Cuba has agreed to withdraw its troops whenever so requested by Angola, Accor ng to the relevant rules of tional law, that is the proper sequence of events to be followed. The Reagan Administration's "linkage" of the presence of the Cuban troops in Angola with the independence of Namibia encourages South African aggression against Angola, and thus it must share in the responsibility for South Africa's genocidal acts against the people of Angola.

20. Indian Ocean. The Reagan Administration's continued military occupation of the island of Diego Garcia violates the international legal right of self-determination for the people of Mauritius as recognized by the United Nations Charter. The Reagan Administration has accelerated the rapid militarization of the U.S. naval base on Diego Garcia as part of its plan to create a jumping-off point for intervention by the Rapid Deployment Force into the Persian Gulf. As such the Reagan Administration's foreign policy towards the Indian Ocean has violated the terms of the U.N. General Assembly's Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace (1971).

F. Conclusion

21. United Nations Action. From the foregoing, it is clear that the Reagan Administration has substituted force for the rule of international law in its conduct of foreign policy around the world. It has thus created a serious threat to the maintenance of international peace and security under article 39 of the United Nations Charter that calls for the imposition of enforcement measures by the U.N. Security Council under articles 41 and 42. In the event the Reagan Administration exercises its veto power against the adoption of such measures by the Security Council, the matter should be turned over to the U.N. General Assembly for action in accordance with the procedures set forth in the Uniting for Peace Resolution of 1950. In this way the Reagan Administration's grievous international transgressions could be effectively opposed by all members of the world community in a manner consistent with the requirements of international law.

Both the Security Council and the General Assembly should also take into account the numerous interventionist measures taken by the Reagan Administration, whether direct or indirect, seeking to impose financial and economic policies which are contrary to the sovereign independence of states, especially in the developing world, which severely damage the quality of life for all peoples.

to a different type, just as dancers do.
Ice dancing is a relatively new official category in international competition. It has a set form that makes it look like exhibition ballroom dancing on ice and it can occasionally have a touch of musical comedy. Figure skating, in its narrow sense, involves school figures. There are also conventional "skate moves" peculiar to figure skaters.

Curry is a figure skater. Torvill and Dean are ice dancers. That is the real difference between them. Torvill and Dean have theatricalized their ballroom dancing style to such a high artistic level that they are indeed counterparts to Rogers and Astaire on film. The duet in ballroom form was the key image for Rogers and Astaire and they too used popular forms — tap and ballroom to high artistic effect.

Curry could be compared to a ballet dancer. The analogy with Anthony Dowell, England's great danseur noble in the Royal Ballet, is deliberate, Both men have a noble elegant line in their body that is considered classical and there is even a physical resemblance. Indeed, this twinning idea was fos-tered at an American Ballet Theater gala several years ago when they danced together in a top-hat-and-tails number. (Does that make Curry a neo-Astaire? No more than it does Dowell).

Ballet and modern dance are consistently recalled in Curry's productions for his skating company. On the surface, he is seemingly striving to make skating look like theatrical dance. But as his company's season demonstrated more than ever, he is really trying to make skating—as skating—acquire its own artistic value. The least convincing passages in the repertory were those where ballet steps were merely transposed to the ice. By contrast, the most creative results came from dancelike movement that capitalized on skating's own properties such as speed, flow and momentum for spins.

Curry, with his 17 skaters, is nonetheless giving us a kind of dancing on ice. What he is doing is using skating's own vocabulary as ballet uses its own idiom. Dancelike move-ments on ice would seem limited. Figureskating technique involves a set of virtuoso skating moves. Curry is trying to incorporate these conventions into an artistic entity — to make these "steps" expressive dramatically or on their own formal terms as any dance choreographer would. We are not meant to see them as isolated athletic feats to be

There is no contradiction between art and skating in Curry's mind. In a souvenir program for his company on their recent tour, Dorothy Hamill, as guest artist, writes of her own complexes in this regard: "Something had given me the idea that I could never skate artistically. So I worked with all my might to jump higher and spin faster than any girl on ice. Curry convinced her that a spectacular technician could work more artistically. Integrating set moves into the fab-ric of the choreography does not quite yet work when Curry creates solos for Hamill. He was at his best as Pygmalion to her Galatea in "Butterfly," to music by Puccini, where she suggested an exotic creature, finally flattened out at the end like a butterfly ned to a lapel.

Brilliant use of the set move was made by Curry in solos for the charismatic virtuoso, David Santee. The recognizable convention here worked on a second level. In "Russian Sailor's Dance" (the title from Gliere's mu-sic), he turned into a Russian folk dancer, equating skating's squatting turns or air jumps with the best we have seen from the Moiseyev dancers.

Even more interesting was Curry's solo for this dancer to an Artie Shaw recording. This was "Nightmare," replete with fantastic air turns and a rubbery swagger. Wearing black glasses and a red tie, Santee gave us a tough guy in trouble, maybe even Mickey Spillane.
"Nightmare" recalled the gangster solos created by the modern dancer, Daniel Nagrin.

Some of the other items were more con-sciously overt in their references. Curry's Trio" alluded to Frederick Ashton's "Monotones" (set to some of the same Satie music); his "Tarantella" was set to the music by Gottschalk that was used by George Bal-anchine for a duet of the same title; his "Rodeo," using the music Aaron Copland composed for Agnes de Mille's ballet, seemed to have lifted some cowpokes straight out of her work. Jean-Pierre Bonneious's "La Valse," using the Ravel music, had the same scenario as Balanchine's "La Valse." These are glosses upon other people's ballets — amusing but also in danger of becoming Reader's Digest versions of the

ALTHOUGH skating is called beautiful, graceful and identified with gliding. Laura Dean, in "Burn," arranged Curry and his dancers in jagged and brokenlined shapes. The long-line, floating skater gave way to the typical Dean spins and geometric formations. Nevertheless, this was not merely Dean dance on ice rather than a stage. The property of created by the skaters. stage. The momentum created by the skaters and the density of Jean-Michel Jarre's score suggested an aura of new desperation — Curry as modern man in a Cubist jungle, seeking a way out. Eliot Feld also made Curry a seeker in a highly poetic and meta-phoric moon walk entitled "Moon Skate." Jennifer Tipton's lighting on a huge expanse of white, the illusion of weightlessness — all created a mesmerizing dreamlike effect.
Throughout, the choreographer's signatures were never discarded. There were typical Feldisms in Curry's hands-in-pocket stance. Twyla Tharp's spirals and slouches were beautifully duplicated in a reflection created by Tipton on a shiny surface in the Tharp solo for Curry, "After All." Lar Lubovitch's fascination with repetition was mar-velously translated into the choreography for Hamill and Carry as a fun couple with a back-up group in "Tilt-a-Whirl." Bonne-fous's best effort was "Meditation," a splendid adagio act for a harem couple, Catherine Foulkes and Mark Hominuke. Set to music from Massenet's "Thais," and full of lifts, it capitalized on glides and curves. Finally it left its hero helpless as his partner simply floated out. Missed connections were more ironically noted when both Jo Jo Starbuck and Curry sailed past one another in Peter Martins's "Tango-Tango."

At this point the dance choreographers works were the most interesting because their underlying ideas were the most creative, the most complex and richer with regard to structure and concept. But Curry, at his best, provided the pieces most conge-nial to the ice medium. These were his own Polovetsian dances in the mock war dances of Leonard Bernstein's "Presto Barbaro" and "Glide," a white ballet consisting of a human floë — an ensemble in white.

When Sarah Bernhardt first saw Nijinsky and other ballet dancers from Diaghilev's company, she shouted out, "They jump, they jump!" Seeing Curry's skaters in "Glide," we jump!" Seeing Curry's skaters in "Glide," we might exclaim, "They float, they float!" and share the same sense of wonder.

Finland's Singer for All Seasons

by Tim Page

EW YORK - In December 1980. Jorma Hynninen, a Finnish baritone who was then virtually unknown in the United States, made his first New York appearance, singing to a handful of cognoscenti in the modestly sized Carnegie Recital Hall. It was one of the hall's more memorable debuts.

"Shortly after he began his program of Sibelius and Wolf songs," one critic en-thused, "it became readily apparent that Hynninen possessed a voice of exceptional beauty, an instrument, moreover, that is governed by a completely finished vocal techque, a superior musical intelligence, and a mque, a superior musicai musicas strikingly individual dramatic tempera-

Hynninen had been a major artist with the Finnish National Opera for 10 years. In the summer of 1983, he accompanied the Helsinki-based troupe to New York for two performances of Aulis Sallinen's gripping "Red Line" at the Metropolitan Opera House. And last season, he made his formal debut in a Metropolitan Opera production, as Rodrigo in Verdi's "Don Carlo." These appearances, along with performances in Milan, Vienna, Munich and other European centers, and a handful of distinguished recordings, have added to Hynninen's growing repptation; indeed, some critics believe him to be one of the great vocalists of our time. In addition, he recently has been named artistic director of the Finnish National Opera.

Hynninen was back in Carnegie Hall recently, but this time in the main auditorium, with his longtime accompanist Ralf Gothonia, performing songs by the Finnish composers Yrjo Kilpinen and Jan Sibelius, as well as Schubert's "Schöne Müllerin."

The baritone had special reasons for including the Schubert song cycle. "Schöne Müllerin' is the beginning of Schubert's story," he said in a recent interview. "He tells the story of life in his song cycles. 'Schöne Müllerin' is lovely, youthful, lyrical music, full of springtime. And then on the other hand you have Winterreise, which is music of gloom and despair --- winter not only on the earth but also in the soul."

A slight, blond, handsome man in his early as if measuring every thought before allowing it to metamorphose into speech. "Ralf and I started our association 15 years ago, and we have now sung over 100 concerts. In truth, I actually prefer singing concerts to opera. In concert performances, you have only the music and your talents to rely on.

"Of all song composers, Hugo Wolf is my favorite," he said of the short-lived Austrian composer who died insane in 1903. "He can create so many different moods so very 40s, Hynninen speaks English deliberately. quickly, in only a few measures of music. He follows his poets, lives with them, takes their words and elevates them into a perfect synthesis of text and music."

Despite his avowed preference for concerts. Hymninen recently accepted the posi-tion of artistic director with the Finnish National Opera. "I have a four-year contract, with an option to renew," he said. "I don't know if I will want to continue after this term is up. I will have to think it over; Shall I continue to be an impresario, or shall I just concentrate on singing?

"There's no doubt in my mind that I am a singer first and foremost, and that's the way I want it to remain. Even with my new position, I will sing about 60 evenings of opera, and about 60 recitals over the course of a year. Two or three months out of every year, I will have to be away from Finland, but I don't like to leave. People tell me that I should concentrate on Europe and America, but Finland is my home, and I want to spend as much time as possible there.

"The Finnish National Opera is most re-nowned for its own repertory. — for the wonderful operas that we have had such luck with in the last decade," Hynninen continnes. "We have composers like Joonas Kokkonen, Sallinen and Einojuhani Rautavaara; their operas are quite popular in Finland, and we have now performed them all over the world - New York, London, Zunch. Rantavaara is writing an opera for us that will receive its world premiere in June 1985."

There has been a gradual growth of interest in Finnish opera and singers over the last decade. Hyminen and the bass Martti Talvela are two of the best-known Finnish sing-ers, while the two operas that the Finnish National Opera presented on its unprecedented 1983 visit to New York — Salimen's "Red Line" and Kokkonen's "Last Tempta-tions" — both received enthusiastic reviews.

Hynninen, in his new capacity as artistic director of the Finnish National Opera, believes that it is important that the troupe establish a reputation for excellence in the standard repertory. "This year we will be presenting 'Rigoletto,' 'La Bohème,' 'La Cenerentola' and Britten's 'Albert Herring,' among others," he said. "I-would hope that we can give the Finnish Opera a reputation for more than just Finnish opera."

Gae Aulenti at Work: A Tale of Two Centuries

by Vicky Elliott

ARIS - The most prestigious of French institutions have a way of taking foreigners on board, not as deckhands, but as captains: Rolf Liebermann, from Switzerland, at the Opéra, Pontus Hulten, a Swede, at the Centre Pompidou, for example.

And even before the captains show up there are the foreign architect-designers: Richard Rogers and Renzo Piano at Pompi-dou, I. M. Pei for the relitting of the Louvre, and Carlos Ott for the dreadmought Opera de la Bastille. Another of these ships of state, the Musée d'Orsay, has a navigator from Milan, Gae Aulenti, to supervise its launch-ing on the Seine in late 1986 or '87.

Aulenti's brief is the "interior architec ture" of the gauseum, which means designing everything that goes inside its hull, from display towers to picture-hanging systems to door handles.

It is her most monumental commission yet despite her reputation, many of her architectural ideas have remained on paper) but mere scale does not worry her. "Did you know that I am designing an island?" asks. It is a floating surface that will tugged from one side of Lake Como to the other, carrying exhibitions for a silk factory. She has been busy this year, shuttling between Paris and her architectural practice in Milan. She designed the sets for the latest episode in Karlheinz Stockhausen's opera "Lucifer," as put on in Milan by La Scala, as well as for an all-star production of a recently unearthed opera by Rossini, "Il Viaggio a Reims," that was performed this summer in Pesaro, Italy. The architectural magazines have been featuring her designs for private apartments, in her spare postmodernist style; all corners and curves and flat surfaces and clean lines.

Then Fiat called upon Aulenti and 20 figures in contemporary architecture, includ-ing Renzo Piano, Hans Hollein, Lawrence Halperin and Ettore Sotsass, to suggest how they might resuscitate their magnificent 1920s Lingotto factory in Turin, recently abandoned. Aulenti proposed turning the factory into a town-within-a-town and its central ramp into a jogging track and prome-nade, and won much favorable comment. A final decision is yet to be made - Aulenti is used to waiting. "That's Italian administration," she says, good-naturedly.

Aulenti is no prima donna. She wears red gingham shirts and sensible strap-down shoes that are good for picking her way through construction sites. She is 56, unlined and unruffled, and she enjoys working with younger architects, who are much in evidence at Orsay, the former Left Bank railroad station about to become a museum of the 19th century. Soon after she was chosen for the project in 1980, it became clear that she was going to have her say.

She thinks that it helps to have wide interests, to have designed lamps and tables and chairs, to be able to think of the public not as a sociological abstract, but as an audience there to see and hear, and she abhors special-"In Italy, it's traditional for architects to design, and after all, all the great architects did — Le Corbusier, Alvar Aalto, Mackintosh. If you know good architecture you can make a good lamp, but making a good lamp doesn't mean you can do architecture. Specialists become technicians." So, while she has been working on the choice of the oolitic facing stone to give the right finish to Orsay, and on the bare wood furniture for the cafeteria, she hasn't lost sight of her central problem: how to create a museum of the year 2000 in a station that was built in 1900. The Musée d'Orsay, which was first conceived of, under Valery Giscard d'Estaing, as the Museum of the 19th Century, is first and foremost big. There are more tons of metal in it than there are in the Eiffel Tower, and it is just as long, if not quite as tall, as the Pompidon Center; its exhibition surfaces will rival that of the Louvre, which faces it across the river.

Aulenti prefers to think of Victor Laloux's station, built in a rush for the Great Exposition of 1900, as just another plot of ground. "If you start building anything, there's always a certain amount of space and another building next door, and you have all sorts of constraints. A context is created. We simply had as a starting point the architecture of

HE restoration work is now well under way: The 944 rose-caissons set into Laloux's metal framework have been molded again, and there are tarpaulins as a canopy to protect the newly paneled glass of the roof. Aulenti has opted for what she calls a "game of Chinese boxes" to show both the Laloux and the Aulenti to best advantage, making much play on the space between the old architecture and the new. For with its acres of skylights and girders, the Gare d'Orsay is a consummate illustra-tion of what happened to architecture in the 19th century. This was the age that, as the German critic Walter Benjamin put it, "liberated the forms of creation from art." It turned architects into engineers, who, in their great transparent palaces of steel and glass, juggled with the geometry of the first artificial building materials. And at the same time, a new transparence reached the visual arts, as photography made it possible for the first time to reproduce Nature.

"The 19th century turned the key," says Anlenti, overlooking the cement pylons and tubular pipes that litter the vaulted construc-tion site. "Everything, even in painting, changed in the passage from Courbet to Cezanne, more even than it did with the high modernists. And what Rossini did with the opera foreshadowed Berio."

The museum will attempt to document this, starting from a core of paintings and sculpture that cover the period from roughly 1840 to 1905 - the Barbizon School, the Symbolists, the Impressionists — but ranging much farther into the applied arts. A national photographic collection has been taking shape, and 19th-century artifacts have been pouring in, from Thonet bent-wood cradles to coffin handles by Hector Guimard.

ULENTI, with a wave of her cigarette, A wards off the inevitable comparisons with the Pompidou Center. I think the era of the consumption of art is finithed. Orsay isn't like Beaubourg — that was 10 years ago. After a period of discovery, there is room to investigate in more depth. People are better informed."

She envisages Orsay, it would seem, as an aesthetic experience. The Jeu de Paume, curwas reputed for receiving more visitors per square foot of its surface than any other museum in the world. The paintings are now to benefit from more space to breathe, from the natural light that percolates through the arching roof, and, Aulenti hopes, from surroundings of uncommon beauty.

There will be temporary exhibitions and audiovisual presentations aimed at younger viewers; an Art Nouveau section in one of the two display towers, and an architectural section in a wing where the mechanics of Laloux's structural girders have been left bare. In a museum that is to display not only paintings and sculpture but posters and pho-tographs and the beginnings of the cinema, it is an important part of the project, Aulenti says, to stress the links between the plastic arts, literature and music.

With her experience in opera, she is used to grappling with the idea of art as a totality, and it helps explain why there has been so much work at Orsay both on lighting and acoustics. Aulenti's system for hanging the paintings employs a series of holes that mys-teriously damps the resonance in each exhibition space. Not everybody would have thought a museum was for listening, as well as looking.

She has already embarked on another museum, farther up the Seine. The first section of the Museum of Modern Art at the Pompidou Center, its layout redesigned by Aulenti, is to be opened next May. "I know a bit now about working with metallic structures — old and new," says Aulenti, with her husky mariner's laugh.

Otel Food in Venice: A New Harry's, And Other Outposts of Tradition

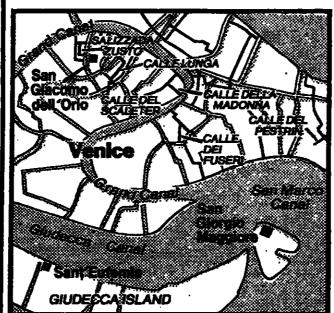

by R. W. Apple Jr.

ENICE — For as long as most people can remember, Harry's Bar has been the outstanding restaurant in Venice, celebrated by Hemingway, recognized by Michelin with two stars, chosen as one of the 10 best in the country by several Italian guides and, most important, universally named by the finicky Venetians themselves as the only consistently reliable class joint in

But Arrigo Cipriani has been worrying lately. Like the restaurant, he was named by his father after an American benefactor who helped set up the business, and he has maintained its excellence despite the temptations of celebrity; with Taillevent in Paris, it is one of the few superrestaurants in Europe that gives as warm a welcome to nobodies as to Somebodies. Yet in recent years Venetians, especially the ounger ones who will be tomorrow's regulars, have been complaining that the prices are too high and that tables are too hard to get.

Me, I would pay whatever he cared to charge, if I had enough lire in my pocket, not only because I love the food but also because the Commendatore, as Arrigo's father was called, had the circumspection to name his specialties — the thinly sliced beef he called Carpaccio and the cocktail he christened the Bellini — after my favorite Venetian painters and not after those parvenus Titian and

At any rate, Cipriani (whose family sold the hotel of that name some years ago) recently opened a zippy new place called Harry's Dolci. Within a week, it was jammed for every meal, mostly, to the delight of the boss, with smart young Venetians. (The menu at the Bar is in three languages, but the one at the Dolci is all in Italian.)
It is a single, woody room, with a few umbrella-topped tables outside, in one of the remoter parts of the city -at the western end of the island of Giudecca, between the church of Sant Eufemia and the brooding, deserted Teutonic warehouse called the Molino Stucky. Just across the broad Giudecca Canal are anchored, most days, the sleek cruise ships calling at Venice, and the view down the canal is closed by the gleaning white bulk of San Giorgio Maggiore; Arrigo Cipriani smiles his double-breasted smile and says that Palladio was my exterior decorator."

The food is simple and ultrafresh. There are antipasti (tiny spring peas, baby artichoke pie and chickpea and onion salad the day we were there), soups, panini (tiny sandwiches filled with Cipriani favorites such as Carpaccio, chicken salad and spectacular prosciutto). Ice creams and pastries, including a chocolate cake of deadly richness, are produced at a new Cipriani bakery just around the corner. There is a minimal kitchen staff, which makes it possible to hold prices down; a pitcher of Venegazzu, the excellent house red at both places, costs 5,700 lire ($29) at the Bar and 2,600 lire at the Dolei Go Sunday 1000 if the state of the bar and 2,600 lire at the Dolci. Go Sanday noon if you can, but be sure to call for reservations (041) 24.844 or 70.83.37. The restaurant is closed Monday.

Aside from Cipriani's two places, the best food my wife and I have eaten on three recent trips to Venice has been in small, out of the way trattorie suggested over the years by local friends. It is in them that you find the most authentic versions of the local dishes, from coda di rospo (anglerfish tail) and triglia (red mullet) and spigola (bass) to granzeola (spider crab) and cigala (a kind of flat shellfish smaller than a lobster) and capa longa (razor clam) and superb scampi.

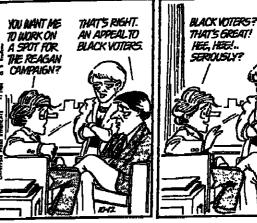

HE Venetians are, of course, a maritime people; they had to be, driven as they were from the mainland to Torcello and finally to the 118 islets of Venice by advancing barbarians, and they have long since lost the taste for most meat -- except for calf's liver, which they eat in vast quantities, sliced into thin strips, sautéed with onions and served with polenta, grilled commeal cakes. The problem is that most of the restaurants that cater to tourists presume that they have to serve meat anyway, and they don't cook it very well. One exception is listed later, but meanwhile here is a short list of places where tradition is served:

Corte Scouta (3886 Castello, Calle del Pestrin; tel: 27.024; closed Monday and Tuesday lunch). At the moment, this "hidden courtyard" with its factory decor and tables covered with brown paper is the best fish restaurant in town. Scallops cooked with a bit of broth and seasoned with flat parsley, small clams touched with garlic, fresh sardines, tiny octopus — all that and more as a first course. Then a pair of pastas - on a recent occasion, one with cigale, another with fresh anchovies. Then a salad ("our midmeal sorbet," said the waiter), then a platter of six or seven fried fish and shellfish. Everything is fresh, light, understated and washed down with Pro-secco, an undeservedly little-known white wine from near Treviso, which comes in sparkling and still versions.

Da Fiore (2202 San Polo, Calle del Scalater; tel: 37.208; closed Sunday, Monday, August and Christmas). Tucked away in a small street not far from the Frari, Fiore is a sober bourgeois place only beginning to be discovered by foreigners. Good oysters, a rarity in Venice, and excellent risottos, especially those made with radicchia. The goal here is quality, not flash, so the selection may be limited. They make their own bread First rate services. They make their own bread. First-rate service.

Antica Bessetta (1395 Santa Croce, Salizzada Zusto; tel: 37687; closed Tuesday and Wednesday). This place is impossible to find, so have the concierge draw you a map; if he doesn't know it, help him along by telling him that it is near San Giacomo dell'Orio. Nereo Volpe works in the plain front room, his wife, Manrizia, in the back.

DOONESBURY

SERIOLISIY

He is the menu (as well as the producer of the two fine house wines) so pay attention to his advice. Among the memorable dishes she cooks from time to time are tagliatelle with asparagus, fabulous fried soft-shell crabs and razor clams in a gentle, herby broth.

Madonna (595 San Polo, Calle della Madonna; tel: 23.624; closed Wednesday and January). Unlike the others on my list, the Madonna is known to almost everybody. Sometimes the pasta is overcooked, though never the risotto di pesce and never the grilled fish. Order that, and enjoy the scenery, because the Madonna is the heart and soul of Venice. The interconnecting dining rooms are always full of laughing, gesticulating, fast-talking people and teasing, hustling, smiling waiters. Near the "far" side of the Rialto bridge.

La Furatola (2870A Dorsoduro, Calle Lunga San Barnaba; tel: 70.85.94; no dinner served Wednesday, closed Thursday and July). Cheerful and inexpensive, this trattoria grills fish as well as any in Venice. Bruno and Sandro, the owners, have a reputation among their peers as carmy men at the market, which has a lot to do with the quality of what they put on your plate. Good house white wine.

Now for the exception. When — if — you get tired of fish, head for Da Ivo (1809 San Marco, Calle dei Fuseri; tel: 70.58.89; closed Sunday and January), a pretty little place with gondolas passing by the windows in the canal that runs along one wall. The chef is a master of that Florentine delight, the bistecca, a huge and juicy Tbone steak. Preceded perhaps by crastini (rough croutons spread with anchovy paste and chicken livers), ordered rare, squirted with lemon, it will calm the carnivore in you sufficiently to permit a return to the briny fare of this noble city that was once a country.

PARIS

A crop of new museums is gradually making its appearance in Paris. Already opened, though not yet widely known, is the new amseum at the Orangerie, just across the Trileries Garden from the Jeu de Paume. The Orangerie, which has been used for occasional exhibitions in the past, now has its own permanent collection, thanks to a handsome gift from Domenica Walter that includes a fine collection of canvases by Renoir, Cezanne and other Impressionists.

Another museum that is particularly active these days is the Musée Carnavalet, the city's historical museum, in the Marais quar-ter. From November to January it will house a show on Paris as seen by such famous photographers as Henri Cartier-Bresson. Next on the schedule is an exhibition devoted to Paris, or Lutèce, as the city was called in Roman and Gallic times. Next year a show devoted to the city's grands boulevards

April will likely see the opening of the Picasso Museum at the Hotel Sale, a restored 17th-century palace on Rue de Thorigny in the Marais district. The museum will house the collection of masterpieces that the French government accepted from Picasso's heirs in place of inheritance taxes, as well as pieces from his personal collection of primi-tive art. The museum will also feature exhib-its devoted to Picasso's relationship with the world of letters, ballet and the theater.

Some tips for getting in and out of Paris: France's superfast TGV express train is a shade more prestissimo than last year, thanks in part to some new track between Lyon and Marseille. The Paris-Lyon run now takes only two hours, and the trip be-tween Paris and Marseille is down to less than five hours, about 30 minutes shorter than a year ago.
Onlyous is the name of a new bus service that the Paris transport authority has just introduced between Orly Airport and Place Denfert-Rochereau in Paris's 14th Arrondissement. A bus leaves every 15 to 20 minstes and takes no more than 30 minutes to reach its destination. The new service is ideal for passengers with light luggage who know their way around Paris, because they can easily change to the Metro at Denfert-Rochereau, avoiding the likelihood faced by the regular airport buses of getting stalled in heavy city traffic on their way to the Invalides terminal. The fare is 12.60 francs (about $1.30).

The wine bars of Paris appear to be expanding, amoeba-like, into chains. There is no McDonald's of wine bars yet, but Nicolas, the big wine company and owner of Jeroboam, one of the newer places, has ambitious plans. Things are booming at Jerobo-am, a handsome wine bar and restaurant in Rue Monsigny, not far from the Opéra. Nicolas acknowledged that Jeroboam was a pilot operation that could be cloned endlessly if it proved to be successful. It has proved mmensely successful but no others have

This is not the case with L'Ecluse, a minichain with five wine bars in the city. Willi's has two, and Le Pain et le Vin has one location in Paris and is about to open anoth-

The original L'Echise opened six years ago on the Quai des Grands-Augustins. That first outpost was situated on the site of a café where Juliette Greco, Jacques Brel and George Brassens sang in the 1950s. Georges Bardawil, who saw the wine bar as an outlet for expressing his enthusiasm for Bordeaux wines, offered a simple menu of cold cuts and irresistible desserts. He soon found he had a flourishing business.

Since then four others have opened in Paris and there are plans for Geneva and Brussels. (The Paris locations are 15 Quai des Grands-Augustins, 15 Place de la Madeleine, 64 Rue François I, Rue Mondétour and 2 Rue du Général Henrion-Bertier, Mark Williamson learned a bit about the de la Coruña in Aravaca, 15 minutes from the business working for Steven Spurier, downtown Madrid. Each disco occupies sevwine business working for Steven Spurrier, perhaps Paris's best-known wine merchant. Thus prepared, he opened Willi's four years ago at 13 Rue des Petits-Champs. The specialty is Rhone wines, and elegant but simple meals are served. A second Willi's is now open at 18 Rue des Halles, near the site of the old Les Halles market.

The third chain-in-the-making, Le Pain et le Vin, is owned by four men who also own restaurants in Paris. At this busy wine bar, which is at 1 Rue d'Armaille and has a good view of the Etoile, the menu includes a daily hot dish and a selection of sandwiches and

MADRID

The word around Europe is that a new and exciting city is emerging for culture and play, a city that happens to be one of the Continent's oldest capitals - Madrid.

Spanish beaches and the country's regional charms have long attracted tourists, but the capital itself was something of a stepchild as far as visitors were concerned a place to stop briefly, mostly to see the Prado. But the great cultural effervescence that has taken place since the death of Francisco Franco in 1975 has infused Madrid with a new vitality that is just now coming to fru-

This year the city is beginning what it hopes will be an annual event — a Fall Festival, or Festival de Otoño, of nearly 100 events over a six-week period. The festival will conclude Oct. 30 with a concert by the Vienna Philharmonic, led by Leonard Bernstein, in the Teatro Real. Among other events on the festival schedule: the Stuttgart Ballet will perform in the Palacio de Deportes nightly from Oct. 23 to 27; and the National Orchestra of Spain, accompanied by the famed Basque chorus, Orfeon Donostiarra, will play in the Teatro Real Oct. 29. Certain to be extraordinary are two organ concerts — Montserrat Torrent on Oct. 18 and Lionel Rogg on Oct. 25 -- in the Escorial, an imposing palace on the outskirts of

Other events planned for the city's theaters — and even its parks — include jazz concerts, contemporary and classical plays, flamenco dancing, art exhibits and band music. Local newspapers carry daily sched-

One of the city's greatest new cultural offerings, at the Prado, is also a permanent attraction. "Las Meninas," the 17th-century painting by Velázquez that is considered the greatest treasure of Spanish art, has just been cleaned, making its rich colors and intrigu-ing personality visible in a way they have not en for centuries. While in the neighborhood, you might also want to visit Picasso's "Guernica," perhaps the most celebrated modern treasure of Spanish art, which went on display in its own special small building next to the Prado when it was returned to Spain from the Museum of Modern Art in New York in 1981:

The city itself, always charming in appearance, has undergone a great facelifting. The facades of many of its buildings are being sandblasted, and new shops and restaurants are opening everywhere. The Manzanares River, once a virtual sewer passing through the heart of Madrid, has been cleaned up. Its banks have been landscaped to create a lovely park that includes small houses for the ducks that have been returning, an indication that the river is also being repopulated with fish. Another major park, El Retiro, has been closed off to traffic, adding to traffic congestion but transforming the spot into the tranquil greenery it was meant to be.

About 15 miles outside of the city, in Torrejón de Ardoz, a 15th-century Jesuit monastery has been converted into a charming restaurant and superb museum for religious iconography. A basement bodega that once made the wine for all the monasteries in Madrid still stands on the spot. The restaurant, La Casa Grande, under the proprietor-ship of Rafael Onieva, serves traditional Spanish dishes such as paella. (For reserva-tions, tel: 675-3900.) The monastery is at 2 Madrid Street.

Madrid's night life is blossoming. Two of the newest and most exciting discotheques - Baby-Q and Oh! - occupy converted mansions near each other on the Carratera eral floors and includes outdoor swimming pools, which on more than one occasion have been used for late-night dips.

GREECE

Some outer islands of the Greek archipelagos have become more accessible to visitors - at no cost. Under a new plan devised by the Greek tourist authorities, travelers are eing offered free transportation between some of the country's more popular islands and others not on the usual tourist circuit. The aim is to enable a larger number of Greeks to share the tourists' dollars, pounds or francs. For visitors, the result is easier access to those islands not favored by regular airline or ship service from Athens - those less likely to be frequented by tourists.

Under the plan, which began on a trial basis in August and will continue through this month, free ferry service is being provided daily from Rhodes to the small islands of Kastellorizo, Chalke and Telos; from Sirnos to Kithnos and Milos; from Kos to Nisiros, from los to Folegandros and from Chios to Psará. Free ferry service is also available from the Cretan village of Kastelli to Gyth-eion in the southern Peloponnesus, and from Kavalla, a port in Thrace, to some islands of the northern Aegean and the Dodecanese. Because the free ferry service has already proved popular among travelers, it is to resume next May and continue through the entire vacation season.

Visitors to Greece will have another opportunity to save money, as well as time. A new plan, to go into effect in the spring, will make it easier to travel about within Greece without being routed through Athens, a long-standing feature of travel in the country. The national airline has acquired 30-seat planes that will link Salonika with Kaválla and Rhodes with Salonika, Crete and Kos. This winter, a new ski resort will open at Falakros, a mountain near Drama in northern Greece, Although few travelers are aware of it, Greece already has three functioning ski resorts for those visitors looking beyond Colorado, Tirol and the Swiss Alps.

On the other end of the thermometer, Greece is taking the plunge into nude bathing. Until now, Greece has been the bastion of covered bottoms along Europe's sunbelt. Starting next spring, all can come off at four resorts — at Hermione in the eastern Peloponnesus, at Velika in the southern Peloponnesus and on the islands of Mykonos and

Starting in June, Athens will become the unofficial capital of European culture for six months, marking the first implementation of last year's decision by culture ministers of the European Community to rotate this title among the capital cities of its 10 members.

Presiding over the festivities will be Melina Mercouri, the actress who is the Greek minister of culture. Although plans are not yet firm, she hopes that events will include a presentation of the Peter Brook production of Shakespeare's "Timon of Athens" and an exhibition devoted to works of those who supported the cause of Greek independence in the 19th century, such as Delacroix, the French painter, and Lord Byron, the poet.

WEST GERMANY

Until Allied bombers devastated half its buildings in 1944, Cologne styled itself as Germany's City of Churches. Older resi-dents, who recall the city's former face, talk of a crown of magnificent Romanesque edifices — Sankt Georg and Gross Sankt Martin, squat and reassuring; Sankt Gereon, slender and soaring — that testified to the skill of anonymous architects who created a peculiar 12th-century Rhenish style. Starting next year, Cologne will celebrate the resurrection of these churches from the wartime destruction, the result of a painstaking, multimillion-dollar restoration that challenged the artistic and engineering skills of thousands of builders and artisans.

Beginning on Christmas Eve with a per-formance of Mozart's "Kronungsmesse" in the fortresslike Sankt Maria im Kapitol, Co-logne's Romanesque churches will resound with music in a yearlong program of musical events. The schedule also includes lectures, tours and exhibits.

A walking tour is the best way to appreciate the newly refurbished churches, but a good introduction, will be offered by a sweeping display called Ornamenta Ecclesiae. This magnificent collection of ecclesiastical artifacts will be on view at Cologne's Schnütgen Museum of medieval church art from March 7 to June 9. The exhibit may be seen Tuesday through Sunday from 10 A.M.

to 5 P.M., and a catalog is available.

If you're flying into Düsseldorf or Frankfurt, the terminus for many flights from New York, try Lufthansa's new Airport Express, a bulletlike high-speed train that connects both airports, stopping en route in Cologne. Any place with a name like Schnoor probably needs a recommendation to make it in life. Several years ago, this old neighborhood in Bremen, the lovely north German city on the River Weser, was a scruffy, rundown place, a bit like Georgetown before the Ken-

Amateur etymologists link Schnoor with the German word for string, allegedly be-cause its crooked houses resemble pearls on a thread. Whatever the origin, recent years have transformed the neighborhood's maze of bent lanes and narrow brick gables that bow to each other across alleyways. If you're in northern Germany, a day or more poking around Schnoor's art galleries, antique and craft shops can be rewarding. Or just wan-der, stopping for a bowl of Labskaus, north German chowder, in one of a hundred charming restaurants. It's not open yet, but the Kranzler, a landmark coffee house on Berlin's fashionable Kurfürstendamm, was sold recently to Swiss and German restaurateurs who plan to restore its former blend of south German charm and Berlin brashness. When renovation is complete sometime next year, the Kranzler should be the ideal place to sit, sip a coffee and peer over a newspaper at hectic Berlin passing by.

Many visitors regard Frankfurt simply as a good place to begin a trip to Munich or perhaps the Alps. But there's talk these days about a new Frankfurt, and it's worth allowing some time to explore it.

If you visit Frankfurt, take a look at Deut-

Teatro Real, Madrid.

sche Bank's impressive new twin towers, in the banking center, and the recently restored Römer, the town hall square. ### VIENNA

A new experiment — outdoor opera in-doors — will take place in Vienna's Stadt-halle later this fall. The huge, modern building, in an unfashionable neighborhood in the western part of the city, has lately seen political activity and prizelights. From Dec. 2 to 7, however, it will be the site of a lavish production of Puccini's "Turandot," presented by the troupe of the Verona Arena.

That same production was performed in Verona's Roman amphitheater during the sum-Although the program of the Vienna State Opera abounds with works by Donizetti, Rossini, Verdi and Puccini, the Viennese, apparently, can never get enough of Italian opera. If the production of "Turandot" is successful, an Italian operatic season for the masses will become an annual event.

This autumn and winter, the Viennese are gratefully commemorating the decision exactly 200 years ago by Emperor Joseph II to permit the vintners of the wine-growing sub-urbs to serve or sell their product on their ses without a tavernkeeper's license. Thus, it is as good a time as any for a visitor to sample the new wine in one of the spots that are as quintessentially Viennese as the coffeehouse, only much folksier, amid scenery that has inspired both schmaltzy songs and such immortal works as Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony.

Heuriger, as these places are called in Austrian dialect, means "this year's" and refers mainly to wine and the setting in which it may be tasted.

Whenever the Viennese entertain foreign guests, they take them to one of the Nobelheuriger, the pseudo-rustic establishments that are really tourist restaurants, featuring a full menu, music, crooners and high-decibel conviviality. Some of the best-known are in Grinzing, a former vintuer's village that has become a posh neighborhood. (Take trolley No. 38 to the last stop.) Try Alies Presshaus, Cobenzigasse 15 (tel: 32.23.93) or Hauermandl. Cobenzigasse 20 (tel: 32.20.27).

For a different atmosphere, do what the local connoisseurs do. Take the No. 37 trol-ley to the suburb of Heiligenstadt and wander through crooked streets that Beethoven trod until you find a simple one-story house from which a pole with a bunch of fir branches juts out. This is the time-honored signal for young wine. Or look for such a green tust in Sievering (trolley No. 39 and bus No. 39A), in Neustift am Wald (trolley No. 35 and bus No. 35A) or, north of the Danube, in Stammersdorf (trolley No. 31). Regulars bring their own food and order only drinks. However, snacks can be bought at a buffet — cold cuts, cheeses, dark bread and sugar-glazed biscuits that go well with wine and are known as Weinbeisser ("wine biters"). Patrons are served Sturm ("tempest"), which is a murky, semi-fermented grape juice, or blond young wine in solid quarter-liter glasses. A trio of violin, guitar and accordion may play nostalgic tunes. Hardly anybody spends more than 400 schillings ($20) for two.

BRUSSELS

On Oct. 25 Brussels will celebrate the opening of its new Museum of Modern Art. which gives the city a permanent home for an extensive collection of 19th- and 20thcentury art. The new museum, part of the Royal Museum for Ancient Art and situated next to it on the Place Royale, is a partially submerged building with two levels, the larger one almost entirely underground.

A Belgian architect, Roger Bastin, has designed the building in such a way that a semi-circular shaft of natural light pouring through an opening illuminates much of the underground space.

Visitors to the Royal Museum for Ancient Art will also be able to visit the completely renovated galleries housing art of the 14th to the 18th centuries. The collection here includes works by the Flemish artists Bruegel, Rubens and Jordaens, as well as by French and Italian artists of the period. There is also a particularly rich collection of Dutch painters, including Bosch, Hals, Heemskerck, Rembrandt and Van Goyen.

Both museums are open daily except Monday. Admission is free until the end of

On college campuses, it is incumbent upon Professors to "publish or perish", to ensure tenure by having research tracts printed in scholarly journals. Every year, thousands of candidates for a Pd. D. degree churn out dissertations, papers designed to impress sponsoring Professors. The majority are exercises in adroit plagiarism, mediocre studies belaboring a meaningless point. Go to a library, and peruse the card index under the heading "Shakespeare". There are thousands of titles, trying to prove that the Bard was everything from an astrologist to a student of zoology, works written by those who forget that the "Play's the Thing" and that everything else is trivial. Wall Street has the same failings. Consider reports spewed out by investment houses. The mailmen on the Street walk like the Hunchback of Notre Dame, bent by the amount of material circulated to gurus and investors. Or witness the extraordinary volume of "new issue" circulars that clutter up the mails.

Few are read. Years ago, a legendary analyst coined the phrase: "Don't read a prospectus; weigh it". His theory was simple. The more a prospectus or study weighs, the less the chance of the stock becoming a winner. Most winners are incubating companies without a prior track record, hence the slimness of the offering prospectus or analysis. When a geratic investment firm spoons out a "secondary", or recommends a laded blue chip that has virtually no leverage, the prospectus has to be crammed with the corpora-tion's history. The Street matches the Groves of Academe in preparing verbose reports that often prove boring and non-rewarding, except to Elitists shovelling out their stock at the attack with has suggested that the larger the firm, the less perceptive the study; perhaps mental in-breeding, among the progeny the inherit positions of power, precludes prescience.

Our analysts try to avoid detailed reports. We refuse to hedge; as contrarians we believe that prevailing opinion is perenially wrong. In the summer of 1982, while the DOW was drooping below 800, while the Street was cringing in fear, C.G.R. predicted that the "DJI WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEFORE HITTING 750". Two years later, on July 26, 1984, our researchers mused: "the market will erupt on the upside, vaporizing prophets of doom". Within five trading sessions the DOW rocketed 87 points.

Our forthcoming letter focuses upon shares that may be acquired at premium prices, among them, COLGATE PALMOLIVE and LOUISIANA LAND. In addition, we highlight a natural resource stock that spudded from $2 to $14 in a brief time span, before a 4-1 split. For your complimentary copy, please write to or telephone:

Scientists Give Computers Fuzzy Logic, Like People's

By ANDREW POLLACK

New York Times Service EW YORK - When Hans Berliner first developed his backgammon-playing computer program, it had a backgammon-playing computer program, it had a problem. The computer played a strong game most of the time. But every so often it would make a move that was so atrocious it would blow the game.

The Carnegie-Mellon University computer scientist solved the problem in what might seem like a paradoxical fashion. He made the rules governing the computer's strategy less precise. Instead of specific instructions, he gave the computer more general guidelines. The computer went on to beat the world champion.

Computers are known for their cold precision and logic. But, as in the case of the backgammon program, some scientists are now in the case of the backgammon program, some scientists are now

"The advantage of trying to make the computers behave less precisely and logi-cally. These scientists say that if computers are to take on more of the tasks that people do, if they are ever to have "common sense," they must think in a more approximate or "fuzzy" way, as people do.

"Fuzziness is an essential to be precise." part of human thinking," said Lotfi A. Zadeh, a professor of computer science at the University of California at Berkeley. "It's not something that can be treated with benign neglect."

Mr. Zadeh is a pioneer in developing what is known as fuzzy logic. For 20 years fuzzy logic has been an obscure branch of mathematics. Now it is bursting into commercial use.

Fuzzy logic, its proponents contend, allows a computer to handle approximate concepts, like "usually," or "slightly," or "tall," or "expensive." People often find such "fuzzy quantifiers" far more useful than precise numbers. A person helping another person park a car, for instance, usually does not say to turn the wheel 10 degrees to the left. He says turn it slightly to the left, or a little areas to the left. little more to the left.

The advantage of such fuzzy thinking is that sometimes it is impossible to be precise. In his original backgammon program, Mr. Berliner tried to draw a specific boundary line between when the computer should pursue one strategy, like blocking its opponent's moves, and another strategy, like abandoning the blockade to bring its pieces home. But that was like trying to draw a boundary between day and night. Sometimes the computer would doggedly stick to its blockade too long.

TIH fuzzy logic, the program was able to shift strategies gradually. As the game got closer to the end and the computer closer to winning, it became less interested in maintaining the blockade and more interested in moving its remaining pieces off the board.

The way computers handle approximate terms in fuzzy logic is through the concept of fuzzy sets. Most sets have well defined members, such as the set of numbers between 1 and 10 or the set of students at a particular school. But fuzzy sets have various degrees of membership. A fuzzy set might be the set of young people or the set of high temperatures.

The first major commercial application of fuzzy logic has been in control of processes such as those at chemical plants. Those processes are so complex, with so many variables, that it has been difficult to design traditional mathematical models for computers to use. Rather, people monitor the process using rules of thumb. With fuzzy logic, computers can take over the function using rules like 'If the temperature is high and the pressure is normal, increase the intake of air slightly." The computer would have several fules like this and would val ue them differently. The higher the temperature, the more weight this rule would be given in determining the action the computer takes. F.L. Smidth & Co.

of Denmark sells a fuzzy-logic controller for cement kilns. Fuzzy logic is also appearing in some business programs. Decision Products Inc. of Mountain View, California, developed a financial modeling program that allows users to work with concepts such as "high sales" instead of the more narrowly defined concepts such as sales over $10 million.

3 Swiss Pharmaceutical Companies Have Responded Well to Treatment

By John Tagliabue

New York Times Service

BASEL, Switzerland — If the pharmaceuticals industry has a headquarters, it is surely this trim town where the Rhine binds together Switzerland, France and West Germany. This is the home of Ciba-Geigy, Hoffmann-La Roche and Sandoz, three of the world's giant chemical and pharma-

The three companies are in the midst of their biggest profits surge in recent years, a sharp comeback from several years of stagnation in the late 1970s. But like anxious patients, they are contin-ually monitoring the signs of their improving re-covery and searching for the prescription to keep it going.

The upturn began to build early in this decade and is now in full force. After posting an average sales growth of 6.8 percent in 1983, the companies reported an average gain of 13.5 percent in the first six months of this year. For the year, the growth in profitability is expected to equal or surpass last year's increase of 19.5 percent.

Sophisticated pharmaceutical products account for between one-third and one-half of all three companies' revenues. The rest of the business is in more products such as dyestuffs, pesticides and plastics.

Traditionally, pharmaceuticals have been the companies' bulwark against recession and competition from developing nations. But recently, the three companies, like the pharmaceutical industry generally, have come under pressure from various Governments around the world are acting against soaring health costs, and critics of excessive drug use have grown vociferous. Environmental troubles have also buffeted the industry— Hoffman-La Roche is still caught in the cross fire of criticism in the aftermath of dioxin contamination at a factory run by its cosmetics subsidiary, tion at a factory run by its cosmetics subsidiary, Givandan, in Seveso, Italy.

In the United States, the three companies face the threat of widened generic drug use, which trims profits, under a bill presented by Representative Henry A. Waxman, a California Democrat, that would shorten new drug approval procedures. On top of that, developing nations are proposing that patent protection be curtailed, which would reduce the cerum on research money. the return on research money

Swiss voters will be asked to vote next year on a proposal to restrict animal experiments that, the mpanies say, could seriously deter drug research. Approval is considered unlikely, but that the vote is being taken at all underscores the three companies' sense of vulnerability. Analysts agree that all three companies are well equipped financially to meet the challenge. Clandio Werder, a chemical-industry analyst at Bank J. (Continued on Page 15)

IBM's Earnings Climbed 21.6% In 3d Quarter

NEW YORK - International Business Machines Corp., the world's largest computer company, said Thursday that its profit rose 21.6 percent in the third quarter and was up 20.7 percent for the first nine months of 1984.

IBM's chairman, John R. Opel, said if the dollar had not continued its record-breaking climb in 1984, results for the January-September period would have been even bet-Analysts said the figures showed that the company was strong in all facets of its business. They especially cited IBM's pretax earnings of nearly 25 cents from each sales dollar in the first nine months of

Michael Geran, an analyst who follows IBM for E.F. Hutton & Co., said traders appeared to be disappointed that part of the growth in profit reflected a lower tax rate in the third quarter than a year earlier and that some investors viewed revenue growth as

Mr. Geran, however, attributed the lower-than-expected rise in rev-enue to the strong dollar and said he felt the company had continued to perform well.

And Peter Kuhn, an IBM spokesman, said that any gain from a lower tax rate was all but offset by the impact of the stronger dol-lar.

For the three months ended Sept. 30, IBM reported a profit of $1.58 billion, or $2.60 a share, against earnings of $1.3 billion, or $2.14 a share, a year earlier. Reveme climbed 13.3 percent, to $10.66

For the first nine months of 1984, profit came to $4.41 billion, or $7.22 a share, against $3.62 billion, or $5.98 a share, a year earlier. Revenue rose 15.2 percent, to $31.44 billion.

"We see strength in our entire product line and productivity gains throughout our business," Mr. Opel said. "We remain optimistic about our future." He said that if the dollar had remained at 1983 levels, profit for the first nine months of the year would have been 27.3 percent above the same period a year ago, and revenue would have been near-ly $1 billion more than reported.

Dollar Rises In New York As Gold Falls

United Press Interna NEW YORK — The dollar advanced sharply Thursday af-ter a major U.S. bank reported a rise in profits that apparently lessened concern that there would be problems in the thirdquarter earnings of banks. Gold fell as the dollar rose. The U.S. currency was lower its 19 percent increase the speculators tried to cover their short [sell] positions and not many traders were willing to sell to them at that point," a bank trader said.

In late European trading, the dollar in Frankfurt was at 3.065 Deutsche marks, down from 3.1 DM on Wednesday; in Paris at 9.5315 francs, up from 9.4935 the day before. In London, the pound rose to $1.228 from Wednesday's $1.2256. In New York, the pound fell to $1.2222 from $1.2275 the previous day. Also in late New York trading the dollar hit 3.119 DM, up from 3.095 DM on Wednesday, and at 9.545 French francs, up from 9.4863 the day before.

The two companies that pleaded guilty are Marc Rich & Co. AG, a Swiss trading firm, and its trading arm in the United States, now called Clarendon Ltd. The companies admitted having concealed huge illegal profits involving crude oil trading in 1980 and 1981. In addition to paying the $150 million, primarily for the compa-penalties and interest, the compa-nies were fined $780,000 on the criminal charges. They have already paid $21 million in separate fines for failing to provide documents under a subpoens issued by the government in

They also agreed not to seek some tax benefits that they might obtain, and the prosecutors said that the United States was receiving a total of about $200 million in connection with the case.

A lawyer for the companies said in a statement that the agreement A business associate, Clyde business activities of Clarendon Meltzer pleaded guilty to a related and the Marc Rich companies.

TOKYO — Honda Motor Co. and Thursday that higher sales of cars, parts and power products, offsetting a decline in motorcycle sales, had yielded second-quarter profits about 30 percent higher then a year earlier.

Honda said reduced interest expenses, increased interest income and an improved cost-to-sales ratio were other major reasons for the increase in profit to 29.6 billion yen ($119 million) in the June-August period from 22.8 billion yen a year earlier. Per-share profit rose to 32.26 year from 25.35 year.

Revenue rose 5.8 percent to 677.2 billion yea from 640.3 billion

For the first six months of its fiscal year, Honda said, its profit rose 33.7 percent to 58.1 billion yen, from 43.4 billion yen a year earlier. Revenue rose 12.4 percent to 1.3 trillion yen from 1.2 trillion

Honda said revenues from car sales in the second quarter rose 12.9 percent from a year earlier, while unit volume increased 6.8 percent. About 75 percent of the auto sales were made overseas, Honda said, Second-quarter motorcycle sales fell 19.3 percent in value and 13.4 percent in volume from a year earli-er, Honda said. Of the motorcycles sold during the quarter, 535,000 units, or 63.8 percent of the total, were marketed overseas.

Sales of power products in the second quarter rose 35.3 percent from a year earlier. Sales of parts, including other revenues, rose 4.6 percent.

Export sales accounted for 72 percent of total revenues in the second quarter, Honda said. They were up 8.6 percent from a year

Alfa-Laval's Earnings Drop

By Juris Kaza al Herald Tribune

STOCKHOLM — Alfa-Laval
AB, the agricultural, food-processing and industrial group, said Thursday that its pretax profits in the first eight months of the year fell 18.7 percent to 312 million kronor ($36 million), from 384 million kronor in the same period last year. In an interim report, Alfa-Laval forecast that earnings for all of 1984 would be only about half the 1983 total of 803 million kronor. It blamed lower orders in its agricultural division and losses on large industrial projects in northern Africa for the decline.

In comments released with the interim report, the group president, Harry Faulkner, said: "Initially, we expected the earnings trends for other business areas would make up for the decline" in the agricultural division. "But this decline was far worse than we could foresee." He said that limitations on milk production adopted by the European Community had shocked farmers into sharply reducing invest-

Mr. Faulkner stressed, however that he thought the agricultural sit-uation was bottoming out and that we consider that earnings should recover, with unchanged demand."

Group sales in the first eight months amounted to 5.6 billion kronor, an increase of 2 percent. Orders were also up 2 percent, to 5.812 billion kronor.

Sales of Alfa-Laval's agricultural group fell 3 percent to 1.5 billion kronor, while order bookings were down 10 percent to 1.5 billion kro-nor. Not counting the newly acquired West Agro, a U.S. agricul-tural chemical company, orders were down 15 percent.

Sales of the industrial group rose gland, to replace outdated a percent to 2.8 billion kronor.

Thursday to allow it to make three flights a day from London to New York. It also hinted that it might move its European base

The airline asked the government's transport secretary, Nicholas Ridley, to approve two flights daily to Newark from London's Stansted Airport. It also asked permission to fly seven days a week between London's Gatwick Airport and Newark instead of the five-days a-week schedule to which it is now restricted except for 10 weeks in the summer.
"We feel very committed to

Britain and we really don't want to go to the Continent," a spokeswoman said. "But by the Philips said the project was aimed at making parts of circuits less than one-millionth of a meter in size. This would allow more complex, smaller and thus cheaper electronic chips.

The new chips will be able to handle 60 times as much information as those now in use and would year and pilot production in 1986.

The project will strengthen the European integrated circuit industry and allow it to face up to increasing competition from the Far East, Philips said.

"By combining the forces of two European governments and two leading private companies, Europe will provide itself with a unique opportunity to achieve a leading position in the world of microelectronics," the company said.

The total market value of inteto be $20 billion and is forecast to grow at around 20 percent next year, Philips said.

The two companies plan to use light optics in making more advanced chips, because they already have experience with this system. Under it, circuits are incised on silicon wafers by projecting light through glass plates containing enlargements of the circuits.

In addition to the project with Siemens, Philips plans to spend a further 250 million guilders over the next five years in research into other areas of microelectronics.

Chrysler Locals Seek Contract Talks

Rewers

DETROIT - Local union leaders of the United Auto Workers, meeting in Miami, have requested that the UAW leadership ask Chrysler Corp. to reopen the current contract, the union's presi-dent, Owen Bieber, said at a press conference in Detroit.

The contract expires Oct. 15,

Mr. Bieber said Wednesday that he would consider a timetable for reopening the contract at Chrysler when pegotiations were completed to reach a new agreement.

at Ford and General Motors. The Chrysler chairman, Lee Iacocca, has said the company is not interested in early negotiations.

The union president said he was optimistic that a tentative agreement negotiated with GM two weeks ago would be ratified. Voting by locals is expected to be completed Sunday.

Mr. Bieber also said the UAW and Ford were working to meet an informal deadline of noon Friday

Commodity Curbs May Be Tightened

By James L. Rowe Jr.

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission has voted to take the first step toward tighter surveillance of commodity brokers, a move opposed by most major exchanges.

The measures would make it easier for the regulatory body and the had previously been a director of self-regulatory exchanges to ensure United Biscuits from 1974 to 1979, that no broker trades for his or her British Car Auction Group PLC account before taking care of customer orders. When futures prices rise or fall sharply, a customer can lose heavily if the floor trader's account takes precedence over the customer's order.

A similar move to regulate trad-

THE CROWDED EARTH: People and the Politics of Population

By Pranay Gupte. 349pp. $17.95. Norton, 500 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10110.

Reviewed by William Clark

THE threat of global destruction by nuclear L war has overshadowed us for nearly 40 years. In that time, the population of the world has more than doubled, and mankind is beginning to realize that population growth poses an equal threat to the world stability and the survival of the human race. It is as possible that large portions of the earth will be turned into desert by the pressures of unmanageable population and poverty as by a nuclear holocaust followed by a "nuclear winter." Indeed, desertification caused by population pressure is spreading in Africa and threatening the Himaavan watershed.

It is the prospect of catacalysm that attracted the interest of Pranay Gupte, a former foreign correspondent for The New York Times who received financial support from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to write "The Crowded Earth." (Many of the chapters in the book are based on columns he wrote for the International Herald Tribune.)
He visited more than 50 countries and. of course, found enormously different cultural views on population growth among the people of Africa, Latin America and Asia. But at the personal level, he always discovered the same attitudes. Women did not want to bear and rear more children. Men, for reasons ranging from machismo to a desire for security in old age to tribal or national pride, favored procreating many sons.

Men control most governments, and Gupte found that those in the postcolonial Third World welcome burgeoning population as a sign of strength for their new nations. At the first decennial World Population Conference, held in Belgrade in 1964, an alliance consisting of the Third World, the Communist bloc and the Roman Catholic Church organized itself to oppose population control, which received its strongest support from the United States. At the recent third conference in Mexico City, the old Maoist position, which claimed population is the ultimate resource of the poor, seemed to have been left to such American academic thinkers as Julian L. Simon (the author of "The Ultimate Resource"), while China emerged as the standard-bearer of the "one-child-family"

What has happened during the past 20 years. as Gupte observed in one developing country after another, is that governments have belat-edly discovered extra hands do not provide enough food for extra mouths. Even laborintensive agriculture, which employs 80 per-cent of the Third World's labor force, cannot absorb the surplus of new workers, and so those workers drift into increasingly crowded cities, where penaps 15 percent of them may find work in some form of manufacturing but 100 percent need to be fed — and fed as cheaply as possible to avoid food riots while keeping the cost of industrial labor down.
Thus Third World farmers — unlike farmers in the industrialized world — are under-re-warded and deprived of both the incentive and the capacity to put back into the soil what is taken out. In Africa agricultural production is steadily falling, and desertification is steadily spreading. As a result, almost every African government has now recognized that "how we breed is how we live" and that poverty, no power, is the main result of rapid population erowth. But what can any Third World government do to curb the rapid growth of population within a generation, let alone within the life span of a government? Virtually nothing. The baby boom of the post-World War II era has provided such an enormously expanded popul lation now at childbearing age that com family sizes were halved, population growth would increase until well past the earl of the

Is it possible all those warnings given in the 1960s and 70s by Robert S. McNamara and others have proved true and it is aheady top late to gently persuade nations to reverse the age-old precept to be fruitful and multiply. Certainly, in the past decade, China, the world's most populous nation, has concluded that high population growth can only be checked by the strictest state-imposed displine. Gupte, who spent a long time in Chia-looking at its one-child-family program he lieves that Draconian measures - inch forced abortions - will soon be recognized necessary by an increasing number of poores countries. But, he observes, the implementa tion of such measures in developing nations will pose very difficult moral problems for the Western countries that have been supporting population control there.

indeed there has already been a confrontion between the United States and China-China believes that in the words of a former head of its family planning ministry, "Socialism should make it possible to regulate house and united the possible to regulation." production so that population grawth keeps in step with the growth of material production." James Buckley, who headed the United States delegation to the World Population. tion Conference in Mexico City, has stated that only the free-market system will increase material production enough to enrich a growing DODULATION.

The great value of "The Crowded Earth" that it is not another exercise in the territyring statistics of population growth or simply the horror story of poverty and fertility. Gupte has made a real endeavor to discover why very poor poor pools have large families. He exercises poor people have large families. He exami how the reasons for this phenomenon differ from culture to culture and discusses why some countries (notably China) are succeeding in checking population growth while others (Rg. nya and India, for example) are not.

SCOREE

This illuminating book does not preach. it does contain a clear message. The Third World is becoming increasingly conscious that the population problem is its problem, because 95 percent of the next billion people to be added to the world's population will be born in the poorest countries, which already suffer tremendous pressure of people on resource. Something must give. If Third World govern ments cannot speedily limit their populations growth, they are inevitably going to demand at large share of the earth's limited resources for their people. At present, three-quarters of the world's population uses about 25 percent of these resources; the other 75 percent of the earth's resources are consumed by the affinering industrialized quarter of humanity. Who can seriously expect stability in a world where seen inequity exists and steadily grows worse?

William Clark is the president of the Landon based International Institute for the Employer ment and Development, He wrote this review for The New York Times.

ON the diagramed deal East and West combined produce a defense that seems easy on paper but is very difficult at the table. North-South reached four hearts, as shown, and it is clear that the defense can take four tricks. It is also clear that the great ma-jority of defenders would fail to do so in practice. North might well have raised hearts immediately over the take-out double, perhaps with a jump to two no-trump, which most experts use to show this type of hand. On Wednesday night after his three-run homer, Bevacqua danced around the bases; he pirouetted as he approached first base; blew kisses to the crowd as he circled second; was still waving as he rounded third, and was greeted by a host of well-wishers at the plate.

Asked if he knew the ball was gone as soon as he hit it, Bevacqua said: "No I didn't know it was out. I hit one home run this year. How the hell can I know?"

So, after three pitches, Whitson had given up three hits and one run. Then, he threw a fourth pitch, and Gibson stole second base. It appeared as if it might become that kind of night.

Next came Lance Parrish, the cleamp hitter, who sent a long foul drive into the left-field corner. Carmelo Martinez caught it, Trammell tagged up and scored, Gibson tagged up and moved to third and the Tigers led by two runs. Then Darrell Evans looped a single be-

NEW YORK - Glance over a National Hockey League roster and you are as likely to find a player from a U.S. high school as from the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League. Check out their hometowns and you will find NHL players come from Skelleftea, Sweden, and Minneapolis as well as from Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, and Toronto. "Canada," said Max McNab, "is just another country producing hockey players." Such a statement would have been heresy a very few years ago. Today, McNab, the general manager of the New Jersey Devils, is exaggerating a bit, but not much. Not only are more Americans and Europeans playing in the NHL than ever before, but also more are becoming stars, and they are influencing

But the numbers indicate the dramatic change in outlook among the league's executives.

"There's more open-mindedness all down the line now," said David Poile, Washington's general manager. "Expansion has done it — there were six teams, now there are 21, and that meant a demand for new players, new coaches, new people to run clubs and because of that, new ideas."

The NHL's expansion opened up more jobs, giving more boys a realistic dream of making it as pros and encouraging the talent-ed ones to keep playing. Doctor-Actor-Author-Director-Lecturer Is a Man 'Interested in Everything!'

By Judy Klemesrud
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Jonathan Miller, the physician, actor, author, lecturer and director of plays, operas and television, has turned his interest to the birds and the bees. For the moment, anyway.

The 50-year-old Englishman, perhaps best known in the United States for playing host on the 13-part PBS medical series called "The Body in Question," has written a book about human development from conception to

Called "The Facts of Life" (Viking, $18.95), it is what is known in the trade as a pop-up book because it has three-dimensional movable illustrations, some of them very graphic, of what happens in the formation of a baby.

The labels "controversial" and "unorthodox" have often been attached to Miller's artistic efforts, including his recent staging of the Verdi opera "Rigoletto," which he set in a Malia-ridden Brooklyn of the 1950s. But he says that he was not trying to be provocative with "The Facts of Life," written in collaboration with a designer. David Pelham.

"It's so matter of fact that even to anticipate trouble you'd have to be very, very neuronic," he said recently in an interview in the lobby of the Algonquin Hotel in Manhattan, "Look around the room. Everyone you see is here because of what is shown in the book. Surely it's not rude to ask how.

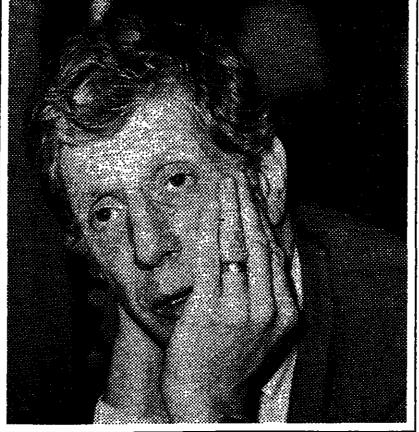

"I can't bear provocation because the peo-ple you provoke are so idiotic. I just try to clarify and say clearly what was previously obscure or misunderstood or overlooked."

The six pop-ups show the male sex organs, the female sex organs, sperm assaulting a ripe egg cell, a 40-day-old fetus, a 24-week-old fetus and a 9-month-old fetus about to be

Miller said the book was not necessarily intended for children. "It's for the childish in the adult or the adult in the child." He noted that it was a follow-up to a book he and Pelham did last year called "The Human Body," in which the sexual organs were not

He expects no criticism from conservative groups, he said, adding that "a number of serious pro-life people" had told him they liked the book because they regarded it as an argument against abortion. "It shows how the fetus develops from a very young stage, and you can see that it's a little creature, quite human," he said.

Asked his views on abortion, Miller said: "I believe the rights of a living individual take precedence over the rights of an as-yet-undisclosed individual. At the same time I don't think abortion should be approached with careless indifference, as if at were an appendix. It's a moral decision requiring as much constantly in motion as he takes. He runs his hands through his grayish-blond curly hair, fiddles with his watch, touches his knees, and crosses and uncrosses his long legs.

A Cambridge graduate, he received his medical degree from University College, London, in 1959. He left medicine in the early '60s to be the co-author of and to appear in a satirical revue called "Beyond the Fringe," with Dudley Moore, Peter Cook and Alan Bennett, which played on Broadway from 1962 to 1964.

Since then he has written several books, including "Darwin for Beginners" and "States of Mind," and has directed plays and operas all over the world. Last year Queen Elizabeth II named him a commander of the Order of the British Empire.

Now, he says, having stopped directing plays to return to medicine, he is doing research in neuropsychology at Sussex University. One reason for his decision, he said, is
